A MURDER THAT WAS COPIED AFTER LONG ISLAND'S FAMOUS SLAYING

[illegible] Jan. 29 (AP)—Had Mrs. Jowers every dreamed that Jowers would come home before he did, Ruth would indeed be the wife until Jowers had fallen asleep.

This might have come out indefinitely and not the Long Island murder given the lovers an idea. So, one night, Ruth waited in the dark attic with more than his usual craft. His son Paul, used to way with him. Jowers was a big man, and Ruth, who had planned things better than Judd Gray had planned, was taking no chances.

At last Jowers' high-pitched snores announced that he was asleep. Mrs. Jowers stalked Ruth. He came into the bedroom. Mrs. Jowers held a light and Ruth swung an four-pound sledge-hammer. It was over.

Jowers was too heavy for Ruth to carry down to Newport. So Paul was pressed into unwilling service and father and son dragged the body down stairs, across the living room floor and loaded it into the car. Then they drove for miles to a bridge over a lonely region, where Ruth had heavy weights to the body and dumped it into the water.

The next day Mrs. Jowers announced that her husband had left her. The story was generally accepted but Sheriff John Coleman nevertheless went to her home to question her.

It was Sunday and she was [illegible] the sheriff was [illegible] an hour later when she was [illegible] to enter and examine the house.

As he suspected, the bathtub was being used to store bloodstains.

Mrs. Jowers and Ruth were arrested. After a brief confession they confessed. Meanwhile the two Paul, Jowers found Paul at a movie and [illegible] him to the jail. The lad was not allowed to bring [illegible].

"The girl [illegible] me," he said. "I wouldn't place every night. Looked there I was going to drill [illegible]. It had [illegible] wouldn't let me."

Then the boy recalled a dreamy shadowy drama—the drama of the semi-illiterate self-styled adventurer. Coming too soon to bed with a murder, stifling the boy's protests with threats and threats and [illegible] him to take part in a crime that [illegible] the kid of story for boys [illegible].

When the two went [illegible] together Paul [illegible] Jowers was to be killed.

"I wouldn't do that, Paul," said the lad. "I wouldn't help you do it."

"You'll do just as I say or I'll [illegible] you," snarled Ruth.

Then, later, on the picture bridge over the lonely [illegible] Paul and was joined the lifeless body on the rail. Paul pleaded again.

"I told Pop that wasn't any way to do," he said. "I told him that if he was going to do that he ought to have him right. I told him he should be hanged. I asked him how he would like to be done that way."

But the boy's protests were [illegible]. Ruth made him help get Mrs. Jowers ready for bed
