WHEN EDITOR MEETS EDITOR

Burgomaster Max is Coming to Amrica to Congratulate Mr. Harding

BRUSSELS, April 19.—It will be "Mr. Former Managing Editor meet Mr. Former Managing Editor" when President Harding greets Burgomaster Adolphe Max of Brussells, who has been designated by the council of ministers to head the Belgian delegation to Washington to congratulate the president upon his election.

Burgomaster Max's courageous stand against the Germans in Brussels during the first months of the occupation is known the world over for his long imprisonment was the subject of much comment but what is less known is that, previous to being elected Burgomaster of Brussels, he was in charge of a newspaper as managing editor and also honorary president of the Belgian Press association. Le Soir the paper which Burgomaster Max edited and directed during several years now has the largest circulation of any newspaper in Belgium. Burgomaster Max speaks English fluently.

MY HEART AND MY HUSBAND

Adele Garrison's New Phase Of
REVELATIONS OF A WIFE

CHAPTER 49

WHY DICKY SAID "THE EXPLANATIONS WILL BE UP TO YOU."

"Miss Dean!" I echoed in amazement. "What—"

I broke off abruptly. Not for worlds would I ask my husband for any explanation of his surprising statement concerning my colleague in the teaching force of Bayview, although the revelation, casually though it was made, that he had seen the pretty, dashing girl in whom he had betrayed so much interest at the Stockbridge reception, was an unmistakable shock to me. But my knowledge of Dicky's volatile, careless nature, the memory of former mistakes of mine in my attitude toward his escapades, above all the recollection of Lillian's sage advice to me so often repeated, aided me in preserving an attitude of good-natured indifference toward the information Dicky had just given me.

"She isn't my keeper," I said gayly, with a hasty shelving of my amazed attitude. "And my important business had nothing to do with the school. So as she wasn't on the train with me—she left on the train before mine—she could not possibly have known anything about my errand. I'm sorry. Next time I'll give her full particulars."

I kept my voice care free, mirthful, but I couldn't refrain from the sly reference at the end of my sentence. Dicky's face flushed, but he grinned reluctantly.

"Think you're smart, don't you?" he muttered boyishly, then wheeled toward me, evidently bent upon explaining matters.

"I suppose I'd better trace me tracks, footstep by footstep from the door of me studio to home or you'll be imagining all kinds of things," he began.

I held up my hand protestingly.

Madge's Diplomacy.

"Oh, Dicky, please!" I said with a bored air. "When there are so many interesting things to talk about, why waste time in explaining how you happened to run across one of my fr— acquaintances?" I made the correction deliberately.

I knew, as I had known from the time of first seeing Bess Dean, that while I probably would have no cause to count her as an enemy, yet I could never call her friend.

"Miss Dean," I continued, "frequently goes into the city directly after school, and comes out again on the early evening train. It is the most natural thing in the world that you should meet her. Tell me about that movie program at Cresthaven. Is it too late to go over? I believe if we hurry we could get there in time for the second run. We could take a taxi over and that 11:15 back. Then we'd have time for a cup of coffee if we wanted to after the performance."

I had about as much interest in a movie program at Cresthaven as I had in the ponderous discussion of the old theologians concerning the number of angels who could dance on the point of a needle, but my instinct recognized a tensity in the mental atmosphere surrounding my husband and me which I would have taken almost any means to loosen. To my surprise, Dicky showed distinct traces of embarrassment.

Dicky's Reasons.

"Why, I guess we've got time enough!" he said. "But—well, you'll have to do the explaining to Miss Dean."

I took a firm grip on my temper and suppressed any indication of surprise.

"I'm the best little explainer in the state, probably in the country," I returned gayly. "but I certainly will have to have an outline of what I'm to explain. If you'll just give it to me in words of one syllable—auth
