game of contract at the Club that he forgot his irritation. It was almost eleven o'clock before he realized that there had been no message from his step-daughter.

He would go home. He wouldn't beat about the bush, he would give his ultimatum.

If she were not there—

Well . . . it would be all the worse for her!

She was not there. He waited hour after hour. Irritation gave way to anger . . . anger to fury . . . that spent itself in a recital of the stringent rules of conduct he had formed for her. The Colonel finally slumbered in his chair.
