THE CHILDS SUNDAY
By Allen Judson Poole

Sunday is all too often a day of vacation for the children. The ordinary Sunday routine is interrupted. Meals are at different hours.

The children frequently miss their nap and are overstimulated by the excitement of the day. Perhaps they are upset and disappointed and a sleepy child until Tuesday is with them here in their most cheerful mood.

The very little children should be protected from the strain occasioned now on Sundays. The baby living back home, when every one is at home, the baby cuddle the quiet gay one. Take a convenient, all been usually because the mind for him.

Long interesting other engagements of these during traffic are left over for him. If the mother of the family are going on a Sunday excursion, they should be sure to have the two and three year old at home with some competent person in the back street back yard.

When an older child is to be taken on a Sunday outing, it is planned as much a day as it would include. An appropriate ride should begin early in the morning before the crowds become congested.

There should be plenty to take allowing to be spent playing in the sand at the side of a lake or a out the countryside beach. The child should have the sand that is now a more other sandy spot.

Of course the most important factor in such a Sunday excursion is the mental attitude of the accompany. A serious mother who insists on driving from the beginning, a father who is curt and irritable under slight provocation, those who are cheerful in a state of per fect relaxation no matter how a day the day has been planned.

DALLAS, Tex., May 15 (AP)—The reprimand order by the general conference of the Methodist Episcopal church, south, to newspapers which the conference considered gave "unfair distort" to sensations (by author unknown) of the church, was delivered to newspapermen yesterday by the committee named to write it.

The statement follows:

"It is the sense of this general conference that we fully appreciate the service the press renders to the church, and we are willing to cooperate with the newspapers in every way possible.

"The 'conflict method' sponsored, presumably were the newspapers filed by the Rev. Herbert Smith of Washington, D. Bishops Rogers and Hoover were given a clean slate by the Episcopacy committee considering the charges.

"The committee yesterday had not yet considered the records of the other two bishops named.

"The conference, without a dissenting vote, adopted notice of the resolutions of Bishop Joseph Berry, of Washington, D. The vote was taken when the committee by unanimous vote stated that rules be suspended so the resolution might be considered.

ANSWERS, WHAT
By Allen Judson Poole

The intelligent young mother of today has heard so much and read so much about the importance of habit training that she frequently forgets that her baby is something more than a physical organism and a set of conditioned reflexes.

In order to give an healthy personality and confidence that she has not time to realize that these things, important as they are, may, if overstressed, result in serious mental and emotional maladjustments.

A child can be taught nothing so valuable that it will compensate for concentrate training of emotional tension involved in learning it.

Certainly it is time for the toddler to have his own bedroom in the afternoon and to hang up his work clothes and leave when he is through with them.

It is going too far to insist on dressing himself and on hung up clothes properly upon the clothes tree and to put his toys away in the play box when he is through playing with them.

But these things are important to the child only in so much as they give him a certain kind of freedom, a sense of power and an impetus for further accomplishment.

To any of them is worth while insist upon the other upon the attitude toward himself and the world about him.

As soon as the training is accompanied by emotional stress of anything short the value of what he learns is wholly overshadowed by the bad influence of strong attitudes which are being set up.

The young mother who is eager to train her child must have not only the ideas but her child. Then again, in the situation is some where her neither has had enough for the day, when it is time to prepare a point, and when to let the matter go.

SKIN DISORDERS

Only a few skin diseases are more difficult to cure than chronic acne. When this common type of skin disease has been allowed to go on for years it seriously disfigures the sufferer and makes its treatment difficult.

Black-heads and pimples should therefore be attacked at the time of their initial appearance. Acne vulgaris, as this condition is known, is a disease of puberty and of early adulthood. A black-head is not, as some have supposed, an oil gland, the ducts of which has become blocked by the drying up of its secretions. It is an oil gland blocked by a mass of germs. Expert as acne bacilli which are engaged in a layer of skin cells thrown about the germs for protection.

The acne bacillus is usually not found in the skin until the time of puberty and the theory is that its presence on the skin at and after the time of puberty is due to the increased activity of the oil glands of the skin associated with that period. The bacillus thrives on an oily skin.

A pimple is the further development of the black-head. It is usually due to the further infection of the stopped up oil gland by other germs.

Prevention largely depends upon scrupulous cleanliness and control of the oiliness of the skin.

Soap and hot water are the time honored remedies for this condition. The face should be soaped nightly for at least three minutes by the clock, and should be bathed in hot water. The person must not finger his face. Chronic cases will often demand expert handling. Use of unknown cheap soaps or lotions is unwise.
