SALES "OPENLY ARRIVED AT"

In the furor about sale of military airplanes to France, one thing stands out quite clearly.

The American people are entitled to know what is going on.

If there is one thing that stands contrary to every American principle, it is to have any arrangements or understandings with any country which the people do not know about.

It is all very well to protect military secrets by closed hearings and unrecorded testimony. But it is quite another to have discussions of foreign policy itself in secret.

Can it be true, as reported, that the President pledged the Military Affairs Committee to secrecy in a recent hearing "lest details of the policy involved frighten the public"? This is scarcely credible.

What kind of a policy is it that would "frighten the public"? Isn't it the same public which in case of war would be asked to wage it unfrightened? Isn't the public made up largely of the same people who would in war be drafted into the army and asked to face an enemy, unfrightened? Isn't the public the same one which might be asked to hide underground at the alarm of air attack, unfrightened?

The American public is not so easily frightened. It is entitled to know the facts of life.

It has not forgotten, for instance, how the diplomacy of Sir Edward Grey had the British in a box when the World War broke out. Grey left them no choice whatever but to enter the war. There was no formal military alliance with France. But close cooperation between the general staffs, military and naval, and many "conversations" between civilian leaders, had made the two countries inter-dependent and closely linked. When war came, the British people had no genuine free choice.

The United States wants no agreements, undertakings, or obligation, spoken or unspoken, written or unwritten, that will deny to it a free choice if there is another world war.

This is not to argue that we should refuse to sell airplanes to France. We are already selling war supplies to Japan to help it bomb the independence out of the Chinese. We are selling them to South American countries whose current governments are less than completely democratic. In fact, we are selling them to all comers except to the legal Spanish government.

Probably it is all right to sell planes to France. But we have a right to know precisely what policies we are being committed. Nothing less than that will sustain popular confidence in those policies.

PERILS OF STAYING AT HOME

In 1938 it was actually more dangerous to stay at home than go out on the streets on foot or in an automobile.

At least that's a fair deduction from the 1938 figures on fatal accidents compiled by the National Safety Council. They show that while 32,000 people were killed in traffic accidents, 32,500 were killed by accidents in their own homes.

For the first time in 10 years the home was more deadly than traffic, for while concentrated traffic safety drives were cutting the traffic toll by 7640, a reduction of 19 per cent, fatal home accidents increased 2 per cent.

The accident prevention work of the National Safety Council and other agencies proved them a real national asset in the year just passed. For they helped the United States to cut its accident death toll by 10,200 for the year. Further, 700,000 fewer persons were disabled by injuries in 1938 than in 1937.

Sentiment aside, there is a tremendous economic gain for for the country in thus cheating death of what he has come to regard as his legitimate prey.

But the toll of accidental death is still a terrible one, and the encouraging results of the 1938 safety campaigns should stimulate everyone to seek even better results this year.

BEWARE THE MARTIANS!

Speaking of the prospect of war—

Mars himself is rushing at the earth at a furious pace, and will approach very close on July 23.

Pretty close, that is. Very close only in the astronomical sense. On July 23 he will come within 36,030,000 miles of the earth. Considering that he is now 176,000,000 miles away, you might call that near approach in July "pretty close" as those things go, out there in inter-stellar space.

That's the time for all those who tumbled out of their houses in terror during the radio "invasion of the Martians" last year to step quietly outside and take a calm look at the red planet whose name is that of the Roman god of war.

Note the date. And don't forget to look under the bed for Martians!

What was good enough for Father is good enough for me, is exemplified again as the New Hampshire legislature votes not to replace the gallows with an electric chair.

Patriotic fervor as handed over the microphone by Hitler is said to be furnished by a radio mechanic with asthma.

WASHINGTON LETTER

By BRUCE CATTON
Register-Guard Washington Correspondent

WASHINGTON, Feb. 13.—By day the national capital is exciting enough. By night it is nothing less than magical.

When the sun goes down they turn on the floodlights. Then the Capitol dome floats over the dusk, white and shining; the Washington monumen rises like a pillar of fire by night; and a marble Abraham Lincoln sits in his great chair in the Lincoln Memorial and—through some trick of the lighting—seems to look out with a brooding tenderness at these two symbols of his country.

These three things . . . Capitol, monument and memorial . . . somehow sum up the best that Washington means.

The best place to go to see them is the open space in front of the Lincoln Memorial. To the east the monument; a tall, unadorned shaft which is a constant reminder of the man and the spirit that brought the country to birth. Beyond it the Capitol. All you can see of it is the dome, made small by distance, gleaming as white and insubstantial as the dome of some city imagined but never seen. And behind you are the tall columns of the memorial, with the great statue within softened and humanized by the lights.

Night Kind to Imperfections

Now in ordinary times, it is easy enough—all too easy, perhaps—to remember you country's imperfections down here in Washington. Under that gleaming dome of the Capitol, for instance, there sits a cross-section of the electorate; men who often enough make mistakes and think of their own fortunes instead of their country's and share in all of the faults common to all the rest of us.

But by night, when the lights are on, you don't think of that.

For if you see the reality by daylight, at night you see the ideal. And in the long run the ideal is always more important than the reality. What America always wants to be, often honestly tries to be and now and then gloriously succeeds in being, is the justification for her existence. And it is that which you see at night.

Then the shining dome of the Capitol is more than just the top of the government's most important building. It is the symbol of a society where men are free; a society in which men strive to get along together, in which one man's advantage is not another man's disadvantage, and in which every man has his chance to get as much human happiness and contentment as fate will let him have.

And as the white dome symbolizes that, and rises triumphant over the night as a portent of free society's ultimate triumph, so does the Washington monument symbolize the devotion, the endurance and the selfishness on which the nation was founded.

In Memoriam

We can forget those things, and we do forget them much of the time. But they were real. Neither the monument nor the dome would be there if they weren't. What we have today was paid for by other men's sacrifice and built upon their vision of a better order of things; and that shaft that reaches up toward the stars, and challenges the shadows with its light, is a great reminder of it.

Then there is the Lincoln Memorial. It is a huge building, and it contains nothing at all but a statue and a few words carved on its walls; yet its half-lit dusk is populous with memories and dreams, and its silence is eloquent with the things the nation said in its hour of agony and crisis. Here is no mere memorial to a war between states; here again is a symbol—a symbol of the toughness, the vision and the compassion which a rough-hewn, close-to-the-soil people found within themselves when they needed them most. The saving grace of the national soul must reside somewhere close to this echoing chamber.

The eerie, breath-taking loveliness which the floodlights give the Capitol dome, the Washington monument, and the Lincoln Memorial is very likely a commonplace thing.

Yet they are worth traveling the breadth of the continent to see. They summon up the best there is in you. They give your patriotism a new birth and a new understanding. They are America caught with her eyes on the ideal.

AN EDITORIAL ON HEALTH

By DR. MORRIS FISHBEIN
Editor, Journal of the American Medical Association, and of Hygeia, the Health Magazine

The occupational therapist uses creative arts and crafts which can readily be adapted to the needs of the bedridden and convalescent alike. These stimulate a patient's interest in something other than himself. Because of the physical motion involved, they can be made to provide scientifically planned exercises for impaired muscles or joints.

* * *

Educational programs are planned from the most elementary, which are used for children, to lectures, organized reading, extension courses in school and college work and training along prevocational lines to stimulate healthy mental processes. Such programs make time spent in convalescence profitable not only physically, but culturally.

They are especially valuable in tuberculosis sanitoriums and to a growing extent also in homes for the convalescent and chronic invalids, in mental hospitals, and among groups of the blind.

Recreational activities are also included in occupational treatment.

Industrial projects are used to help re-establish the patient as a productive, responsible member of society by utilizing the industrial resources within the hospital itself for occupations suited to his working ability.

* * *

Let us see how occupational therapy can be helpful to an injured workman. Here is a man whose hand was badly cut. The wound may be healed, but the fingers are still stiff and the tendons which move the fingers may be bound down as a result of infection and lack of use. He might get a great deal of benefit from weaving, using a small hand loom and shuttle of a proper size to fit his grip.

Every patient must be studied, however, to pick out for him a job that is suitable to his particular disability. This is where the training of the therapist shows its worth.

Today's Recipes

(By NEA Service)

IDA TARBELL reports in her life of Lincoln that he was a great one for fruit pies in his bachelor days, and that after he went to the White House as president, several Illinois ladies used to ship pies to him there.

Here's a modern, labor-saving fruit pie, with patriotic stars of crisp pastry, for dinner on the 12th of February in honor of Abraham Lincoln's birthday.

Date Pie
(6 portions)

One and one-half cups water, 1 1-2 tablespoons quick cooking tapioca, 2 tablespoons brown sugar, ¼ teaspoon salt, 2 cups quartered dates, 2½ tablespoons butter, 3 tablespoons lemon juice. Pie crust.

Bring water to a boil over direct heat. Combine tapioca, sugar, salt and dates. Add, gradually, to water and boil briskly 1 minute. Remove from fire. Add butter and lemon juice, let stand while pastry is being made.

Line a 9-inch pie plate with about ½ of the pastry, rolled 1-8 inch thick, allowing pastry to extend 1 inch beyond edge.

Fold edge back to form standing rim. Fill with date mixture. Arrange pastry cutouts on top. Flute rim with fingers.

Bake in hot oven (450 degrees F.) 10 minutes. Then decrease to moderate (350 degrees F.) and bake 30 minutes longer. Cool. Arrange wreath of sweetened whipped cream around edge of crust just before serving.

Candy Fence Rails
(About 18)

During his rail-splitting days, Lincoln kept his pockets filled with candy for the children who used to talk to him. That gives a hint for a Lincoln's birthday table decoration—Candy Fence Rails and a few toy trees to add green realism.

One square unsweetened chocolate, 2-3 cup sweetened condensed milk, 1 cup confectioner's sugar, ¼ teaspoon vanilla, ½ cup coconut toasted under the flame.

Melt chocolate in top of double boiler. Add sweetened condensed milk and stir over boiling water 5 minutes or until mixture thickens. Remove from fire. Add confectioner's sugar and vanilla and mix thoroughly.

Shape into rolls. Roll in the toasted cocoanut. Allow to stand in cold place several hours or until firm.

Shower Given

Mrs. Alvin Erickson was honored at a shower given recently by Mrs. Lina Tjon, assisted by Mrs. Albridge Bauer and Mrs. Raymond Turner. Guests were Mrs. Alvin Erickson, Mrs. Andrew Erickson, Mrs. J. If your child often coughs at night because of even a slight cold—try this at bedtime: Thoroughly massage Vicks VapoRub on throat, chest, and back. VapoRub's poultice-vapor action tends to keep the air-passages clear, helping to maintain normal breathing through the nose, and to reducing nightly breathing (the frequent cause of night coughs).
