BERLIN'S MESSENGER GIRLS.

The messenger girls, the latest additions to the London streets, have already their counterpart in the German capital.

A number of girls, says the Liverpool post, have now been enrolled in Berlin, and, in spite of the imperial edict against the use of foreign words and phrases, they are known as "messenger girls."

Their uniform is both a pretty and serviceable one. The coat is made of light colored cloth, with black braid, and fastened with three frog buttons. The portfolio is of black leather, in which letters and other documents or small parcels may be carried. The skirt is black and box pleated.

The cap is round, like that formerly used by our cavalry, fixed with a strap under the chin and worn well tilted over the ear, which gives them quite a jaunty, military air.—Ex.

FOR BOYS ONLY.
