"CAPTAIN" MILLER

BROTHER OF THE POET IS VERY ECCENTRIC.

A Pioneer Horseman of Crook County—Drive a String of Pinto Ponies—Queer Habits of a Frontiersman.

One of Oregon's most interesting characters is Jim, or "Cayuse" Miller. He is the brother of the poet, Joaquin, and claims that his brother may have gained notoriety, but that one of these days he will startle the world so that his brother's reputation will pale into insignificance. Just how the enthusiastic horseman will do this he refuses to divulge, but he is as confident of success as if he had already attained it.

Mr. Miller lives at De Moss Springs about three miles from Moro, in Sherman county, where he is the head of a large family. He has small children and large children, and grandchildren, and a large family connection in Eastern Oregon. He has been well-to-do in his time, but now only has a limited fortune, a small home, a wagon and a large band of cayuse horses. These he always has. His ability to handle them easier than any other man in that country has probably won for him his sobriquet of "Cayuse" Miller.

Doesn't Like Notoriety.

I was sitting in the Moro Observer office when I first saw "Cayuse" Miller. He passed by the door, and I naturally inquired of the editor of the paper who he was.

"That is 'Cayuse' Miller, a brother of the poet, Joaquin," replied the newspaper man.

"I would like to meet him."

In a moment Mr. Miller was called in, and I thought to win his favor by announcing that I knew his brother, the poet.

"You don't know much, when you know him" replied the eccentric horseman. "He is much overrated. He writes good poetry I guess, but there is nothing for the world to go wild over him. Why, I have a scheme on hand that will startle the world one of these days."

"Would you mind telling what it is, Mr. Miller?" was asked.

"No, I cannot make it public yet; but when once I get ready to announce it it will startle the world."

"Does it pertain to literature?"

"No. One literary man is enough in one family. It is far above that. I'll give the world something that is worth something. I will——"

Then he refused to talk further on the subject, but his manner, and the few things he had said to his friends lead to the belief that he expects to reach fame by means of an invention that he is studying.

"Have you a photograph, Mr. Miller?" was asked.

"No; I never had one taken in my life. What do you want to know that for?" he inquired.

"Would like to publish a little sketch of you," he was informed.

"You put my name in the paper and I will shoot you," replied the brother of the noted poet and the expression in his eye, his tone of voice and the emphasis he gave it as he struck his fist against his knee indicated that he meant what he said.

"But when you startle the world, Mr. Miller, it will be published broadcast," was suggested.

"I know it, but that is time enough. But I will shoot the man who puts my name in a paper prior to that time," and he walked out of the office, mounted the saddle horse of his eight-horse team and drove down the street.

How He Won His Sobriquet.

"Cayuse" Miller has always been a horseman. He is now about 60 years old and he is still a horseman. When he is not engaged in stock-raising he has been engaged in teaming. He devotes his time now almost exclusively to teaming. He once owned one of the best ranches in Crook county. This big ranch is located near Prineville and is owned by C. Sam Smith, sheriff of the county. It is valued at many thousands of dollars, but for some reason "Cayuse" Miller disposed of it and drifted into teaming. It may have been because he loved to handle horses so well.

He is the complete master of a horse from the minute he gets his hand upon him. No horse has ever got the better of "Cayuse" Miller. He has a fad of going upon the plains lassoing an animal that has never been handled before and hitching it to his wagon along with other horses and driving away as if the animal were an old work animal. To add spice to his work he sometimes lassoes two or more of these wild animals, hitches them in with the other horses composing his team, and starts off on a long journey. He delights in taking these animals into railroad towns and driving them up to a sizzling locomotive, just to see them cavort, while he holds them in check.—Paul DeLaney in Oregon Daily Journal.
