NIAGARA NOW HARNESSED.

And One Million Horsepower May Soon be Developed.

United States Consul Harlan W. Brush at Niagara Falls, Ont., has sent to the state department a report of the development of Niagara power which is of general interest. Consul Brush says:

"The most important development of the year in this consular district is the enlarged production of electric power at Niagara Falls. This has been in use at Niagara Falls, N. Y., for several years past, and the demand for this cheap and constant power has been so urgent that it has been impossible for the power company to keep pace with it. The original development of 50,000 horsepower at Niagara Falls, N. Y., was utilized some time ago, and the company has been working night and day to double the capacity of the plant, the tunnel providing for a discharge of water that would develop 100,000 horsepower. The second shaft has been completed, the machinery has been installed and within a few months the full capacity of the Niagara Falls, N. Y. plant will be at the service of the Niagara frontier.

"Realizing that the plant on the New York side of the cataract would only suffice for a short period, the power company commenced operations on the Canadian side of the river in August of last year. The work has been pushed rapidly and it is expected that by next August 50,000 horsepower will be available. Already the demand is so great that last week the power company let a contract for extending the wheel pit at once, so as to develop 110,000 horsepower, instead of the 50,000 first contemplated. The two companies are practically identical as to stockholders, the Canadian company being officially designated as the Canadian Niagara Power Company.

"A radical departure from the installation on the New York side of the river is the utilization of dynamos of 10,000 horsepower each, instead of the 5,000 units that were installed in the original power house. The 5,000-horsepower dynamos were such mammoth experiments that it was feared they would prove impracticable, but now they are to be succeeded by dynamos of twice their capacity."

Copying Without Credit.

London Graphic: A good deal has been said with regard to the practice of lifting paragraphs from one newspaper to another and reprinting without acknowledgement. Possibly the system of "lifting" does not exist in so reprehensible an extent in the journalistic as in the book world. In the latter you not infrequently come across terrible examples of want of honor. Sometimes you find copious extracts—which have taken the original author time, money and experience to compile—cooly appropriated and often spoiled in the appropriation—without giving the original author's name, or even indicating it in a quotation by inverted commas. It is sad to say this literary larceny is on the increase, and it is to be hoped reviewers will keep their eyes open and rigorously expose these misdemeanants whenever they can get a chance.

German Lawyer's Irish Bull.

Here is an Irish bull which was unconsciously perpetrated by a German lawyer, and is therefore noteworthy:

It happened at a recent meeting of the First Ward Republican Club. The gathering developed into a sort of condolence meeting over the defeat of Martin B. Madden for congress. Several eloquent orators deplored in feeling terms the catastrophe, which they ascribed to factional quarrels among the republicans. Each of them pleaded for a united party, which at the next election, should be victorious. Finally, as a climax, Hon. Peter Hohenlauber rose to his feet. In his exordium he followed the lead of the previous speakers. This was his peroration, minus the delicious accent which lent salt and savor to what he said:

"Und now, chentlemen, let uns all git togedder un undo dat which we have not did."—Chicago Tribune.
