Cavaliers' Love out at least six weeks

By TOM WITHERS
Associated Press

CLEVELAND — Kevin Love won't be able to help the Cavaliers down the stretch this season.

The All-Star forward will miss at least six weeks after undergoing arthroscopic surgery on his left knee Tuesday, a blow to the defending NBA champions as they try to lock up the top seed in the Eastern Conference and home-court advantage in the playoffs.

Love, who is having his best season with Cleveland, had a "loose body" removed from his knee by orthopedic surgeon David Altchek in New York, the Cavs said. Altchek surgically repaired Love's shoulder during the 2015 playoffs.

Love

The Cavs said Love will be sidelined approximately six weeks, which would have him returning by April 1. The playoffs start later that month.

"It's just our road, every season one of our key guys gets hurt," LeBron James said before the Cavaliers' morning shootaround in preparation for a game against the Minnesota Timberwolves. "This year has probably been the worst out of all years, having our starting 2 guard out for so long and then having our All-Star power forward out for an extended period of time. Just next man up. We just hope for a healthy and speedy recovery for our All-Star."

Love missed most of the playoff run in 2015 with a shoulder injury and now joins J.R. Smith, who has been out since late December with a thumb injury, on the sideline for Cleveland. The Cavs (37-16) started the day atop the Eastern Conference, with the Celtics (36-19), Wizards (33-21) and Raptors (32-23), who bolstered their lineup on Tuesday by trading for Serge Ibaka, giving chase.

The 28-year-old Love had complained of soreness and had swelling in his knee following Saturday's 125-109 win over Denver. The team did not disclose results of an MRI and said Monday that Love would seek a second opinion.
