EASTERN NEWS.

Washington, April 24.—Among the documents sent to the House to-day on Mexican affairs is the following interesting diplomatic correspondence: Drouyn de L'Huys says France went to Mexico to exercise the right of war which is exercised by the United States, and not in virtue of any purpose of intervention, concerning which she disagreed with the United States. France went there not to prosecute but to obtain reparations and guarantees. Being there, she sustains the Government which is founded on the consent of the people. She now wishes to recall what remains of the army at a moment when she will be able to do it with safety to French citizens and due respect for herself.

Seward replies: Whatever the motives of invasion, the means taken for destroying the Republican institutions are regarded by the United States as without authority and contrary to the will of the people. The military demand of satisfaction seem to have become subordinate to a political revolution for which France is responsible. The United States have seen no satisfactory evidence that the Mexicon people have occupied the so called Empire, and the withdrawal of the French is deemed necessary to determine that question; it therefore recognizes the ancient Republic, and can in no case consent to involve itself directly or indirectly with Maximilian.

Drouyn de L'Huys replies that it depends upon the Federal Government to facilitate the withdrawal. He also raises a question as to the compatibility of monarchial institutions on this Continent as witness Brazil, which Seward declines to discuss, but reasserts our desire for the withdrawal of the French troops. Drouyn de L'Huys sums up that the United States acknowledges the right to make war in Mexico, while we limit also the principles of non-intervention who have not directly crossed the ocean merely to show our power or to inflict chatisement. We hope the legitimate object of our expedition will soon be reached, and are striving to make arrangements with the Emperor Maximilian, which by satisfying our interests and honor, will permit us to consider at an end the services of our army upon Mexican soil. We fall back at that moment on the principle of non-intervention, and from that moment accept it as the rule of our conduct. We expect the American people will themselves conform to the law which they invoke, by observing, in regard to Mexico, strict neutrality. Mr. Seward says: Diplomatic assurances given by the President in behalf of the nation can at least be but expressions of confident expectations on his part that the personal administration is ever changing in conformity to the national will, but he does not construe the settled principles and policy of the people.

With this explanation, Mr. Seward says: It is the opinion of the President that France need not for a moment delay her proposed withdrawal of military forces from Mexico and putting her principle of non-intervention into full practice, in regard to Mexico, through any apprehension that the United States will prove untrue to the principles and policy in that respect, which, on their behalf, it has been my duty to perform in this now lengthened correspondence.

Chicago, April 25.—Mr. Schenck's army establishment bill, which is being considered in the House of Representatives by sections, for amendment, has occupied seven days and and is only half through with. It differs from the Senate bill in being more favorable to volunteers, and providing also for a veteran reserve corps; and in reducing the staff department. The section relating to the Provost Marshal's Bureau, as amended yesterday, requires that it shall be closed within six months after thg passage of this bill.

The House held a protracted session last night on Pacific Railroad matters, when the bill in aid of the Northern Pacific Railroad was pressed to a vote, but the opposition carried an adjournment. The outside pressure for the passage of this bill is tremendous and the struggle in the House is earnest.
