Speculation Over Invasion May Be Barred Writers

By Ned Russell
(United Press Staff Correspondent)

London, Dec. 21 (UP)—British and American censorship authorities were understood today to be preparing to ban publication and broadcasting of all speculation originating in either country on the opening of a second front in western Europe.

Speculation originating in neutral countries or picked up from axis radio broadcasts or newspapers would not be affected by the order, it was believed.

Military authorities in London and Washington were said to be dissatisfied with the widespread discussions over where, when and how an invasion of western Europe wil be launched.

British Heed Directives

British newspapers have been adhering fairly well to broad censorship directives permitting them to speculate only along the line suggested in official announcements or speeches of high government authorities and to report foreign speculation of any kind.

The censorship discussion reached a new degree of urgency over the week-end with the appearance of dispatches telling of convoys shuttling big detachments of American trops to Britain and speculation over whether Gen. George C. Marshall, U. S. chief of staff, or Gen. Dwight D. Eisenhower, supreme Mediterranean commander, would take over the command of invasion forces.

American authorities here were understood to have complained to British censors about the publication in Britain of stories of vast troop convoys, but the British replied that the stories had originated in the United States and had been passed by the American censorship.

News Censored

As result of the American complaint, the British stopped correspondents here from cabling similar stories of troop movements and other second front preparations to the United States.

American authorities asked British censors yesterday to censor all speculation and news regarding second front preparations originating in either the United States or Britain and the British in turn asked the Americans to tighten their censorship so that newspapers in both countries would operate under equal restrictions.

Washington, Dec. 21 (UP)—Byron Price, director of censorship, said today that he had had no discussions with the British on the subject of banning second front speculation.

"It is all completely news to me," Price said in connection with the reports emanating in London.
