SHOPMEN TO QUIT

Association of Railway Executives called a meeting here today, according to rail officials. The meeting, it was said, was called two weeks in advance of the usual time by B. M. Jewell, head of the shop unions, for a conference principally on contracts with the American Railway Express company.

The strike situation, however, made the meeting all the more important. Rejection of Jewell's ultimatum that the roads ignore the labor board's wage cut decisions and restore abolished rules governing working conditions, was certain, it was said, rail officials declaring that Jewell's conditions for averting a strike were "impossible."

On the other hand, a conference between railroad executives and union leaders was declared possible, not so much in any hope of reaching an agreement, but as a vehicle for carrying the disputes immediately to the labor board, which saved the nation from the throes of a rail strike last October. By the formality of an announcement that the roads and unions could reach no agreement, the labor board, it was pointed out, could take jurisdiction as it did in the threatened strike of the big four brotherhoods last fall.

Another possibility was that the board could similarly assume jurisdiction over situations growing out of an actual strike on the grounds that the strike would interrupt commerce.
