SEARCH FOR LOST PLANE UNAVAILING

ing seaplane PN-9 No. 1.

Conditions for the search were greatly improved over those of last night, when rain and rough seas made survival doubtful of the five airmen who Monday started on a scheduled non-stop flight from San Francisco to Honolulu.

The first message received here from the three seaplanes today said clearing weather permitted them an unobstructed view for miles, and that the ocean had calmed down advantageously. There was no visible trace, however, of the missing seaplane.

Craft In Search

With today's searching seaplanes navy officials assigned half a dozen submarines, several destroyers, and other craft which steamed out to the east in fan formation. Officials continued optimistic that the missing aviators would be rescued, despite the lapse of more than fifteen hours since the PN-9 No. 1 radiocast her last message.

Throughout the night three destroyers engaged in a systematic search of the area in which the seaplane was believed forced down. They steamed in gradually expanding circles until a hundred miles had been navigated, playing their powerful searchlights to either side, but without finding the object of their search.

The U. S. S. Aroostook, airplane tender in the rescue area, succeeded in launching a scouting plane at four o'clock this morning.

Honolulu, H. I., Sept. 2.—(By Associated Press.)—Five men in a disabled seaplane, drenched with tropical rain, hemmed in by tropical night in mid-Pacific, such was the picture painted here today of the unfortunate end of the attempted non-stop navy seaplane flight from San Francisco to Honolulu.

Gloomy View Taken.

This gloomy view of the predicament of Commander John Rodgers, U. S. N., and his four co-aviators, was based on official reports received last night from ships in the path of the big seaplane PN-9 No. 1. The reports all yielded the same definite fact: That the aviators were lost, untraceable in the darkness.

Throughout the hours of darkness, however, plans for rescue of the aviators, should they be found and alive, were brought to completion. The island of Maui, nearest of the Hawaiian group to the point the PN-9 plane was believed to have dropped into the Pacific was designated as the rescue base. Airplanes, submarines, surface ships, were started at daybreak on a systematic search of that territory between the 21st and 23d parallels of latitude and the 153d and 155th meridians of longitude.

Cloudy Weather.

With cloudy weather in prospect today and moderate seas running in the vicinity where it was believed the plane had been forced down, the searching planes took on capacity fuel loads at Lahainia ready to comb the Pacific in quest of the missing flagplane.

A message received from the destroyer Aroostook at 10:15 p. m. last night said:

"No trace of plane No. 1 which must have been forced down over 20 nautical miles south of the Aroostook station where the estimated maximum drift is eight miles an hour to the westward. The seas are moderate and the skies overcast."

With the destroyer Farragut, the Aroostook spent the night moving in the area 300 miles off Honolulu, stabbing the seas in vicinity where the missing plane might have dropped, disabled.

Message Received.

A message received from the missing plane after the craft radioed that it was trying to remain in the air until the dwindling gasoline supply was exhausted, said:

"What is wrong, please? Go ahead," meaning that the Aroostook should proceed furnishing radio bearings to the PN-9 No. 1. To this query the Aroostook answered:

"What is your course and are you trying to find us?"

To this message there was no answer.

The Aroostook after an all night vigil was ordered to launch a plane at daylight to aid in aid in the search. The work last night was hampered off the east coast of the island of Maui by treacherous seas and heavy skies. On account of this condition, three planes which took off from Lahaina to aid in the search, were ordered to return and wait until dawn before going into the air again.
