Only the Brave

Chapter 4

The thirteen years which he passed since the events that made little Glenn Gleason go to the bottom had been years of toil and hardship for father and son. John Tyler, spurred by remorse, went to work to make up for the neglect of his duty to see that the boy had everything he needed for the development of a normal healthy, happy life.

Nothing was too good for Glenn. John and Jeff worked while he went to school and played. By the time he was ready for college, John Tyler had died.

The whole burden now on him, Jeff redoubled his efforts. He sent the boy to Chicago to study law and supported him while he was pursuing his studies. And now Glenn was finished with his schooling and in a short time should be self-supporting.

Glenn himself seemed eager to get to work. For over a week he kept close to the office. Jeff took in occasionally to see how things were going; and now, on the morning of the ninth day, he entered the reception room to find his foster brother with his feet on the desk and his hands clasped behind his head.

"No bites yet?"

"Not even a nibble." Glenn unclasped his fingers and made an impatient gesture. "You'd think at least there'd be a will to draw or a deed to record."

Jeff smiled. "These folks got to be educated; they're not used to having a lawyer around. It never occurs to them to hire somebody unless they can't shoot their way out."

"Like that fellow, Slug Benjamin."

"Slug doesn't need a lawyer. His goose is as good as cooked."

"Maybe." Glenn had shed some of his gloom. "Jeff, I've a good mind to go over to the jail and talk with him."

Jeff grinned at him. "Stick to your knitting and you'll be a big man in this country. . . How's the bankroll holding out?"

"It isn't. I'm flatter than a flapjack right now."

Jeff took a worn wallet from his pocket, extracted a couple notes and tossed them on the desk before him. "When that's gone I know where I can get more. Don't be afraid to ask when you need help, fellow; I'm in this with you."

"Thanks, Jeff; I can use it."

"How's Connie?"

Glenn's eyes brightened. "Now you're talking about something! Met her father and mother and had a rather nice time. Gosh, Jeff, I never knew one man could own so many cows."

"The Crown's a big spread, and it'll be Connie's one of these days."

Glenn grinned at him. "What kind of a cattleman would a lawyer make?"

"The very best. Fellow with a brain like yours could plug a great many leaks."

Glenn walked with him to the door and watched as Jeff mounted the sorrel and rode out of town; then he crossed the street to Mike Pacheco's saloon. Glenn changed his twenty dollars into chips and at the end of an hour he was broke.

Glowering he went out and turned towards the Town Hall. The windows of its second story were heavily barred and somewhere behind those bars was Slug Benjamin, awaiting trial. He walked up the steps and entered the place.

"What do you want?" asked a guard. Glenn saw that he was wearing a Colt six-gun and that a riot gun stood close at hand.

"I'm a lawyer," he explained. "I think you have a prisoner here who might need my services. He calls himself Slug Benjamin."

Glenn submitted to a search after which the guard ushered him into a large room fitted with three cells. But one of the cells was occupied.

"Lawyer to see you, Slug," said the guard, and pushed Glenn into the cell.

"My name's Gleason," he said. "I've just opeed an office here at Cougar."

The man peered at him. "Gleason did you say?"

"That's right, Glenn Gleason." Slug continued to stare at him for a moment; then, "What you and me to tell you about?"

"The shooting of that fellow, Grubb."

"It was self defense. How was to know the danged fool wasn't armed?"

"Did you make that clear when you were charged with the murder?"

"Yes. But Justice Sam Tolson is a miner himself and had it in for me. He bound me over to the grand jury."

"Have you got any money?"

"What for?"

"I don't work for nothing. And where a man's life is at stake, my fee is large."

Slug stared at him suspiciously. "I got a little," he admitted.

"How much?"

"Oh—five hundred bucks."

Glenn got up. "Your life's not worth much, is it? Well, I'll be getting along."

"Wait a minute. Set down." Slug put out a detaining hand. "I might make that thousand."

"Cash on the barrel head."

"No. Half now, and the other half when I'm free."

"All right." He sat down again.

Slug eyed the open corridor door and lowered his voice. "You go to Mike Pacheco's and tell him I sent you for it. Say to him, 'The goose hangs high.' He'll give it to you. Now tell me how you aim to get me off?"

"Not now. I've got to lay my plans for your defense first. I'll take it up with you when I have the retainer."

Ten minutes later he entered Mike Pacheco's saloon. Mike was behind the bar. Glenn leaned over and spoke in a low voice.

"I'm Slug Benjamin's lawyer. He told me to come to you for the five hundred dollars of his that you have." Mike simply stared at him, and Glenn added, "He said to tell you the goose hangs high."

"Oh," said Mike. He went into a room behind the bar and came out with a package of banknotes.

"I'll take a hundred of it in chips. This time, I intend to take you to the well-known cleaners."

Mendenhall Family in Reunion at Donald

Donald — A reunion of the Mendenhall families was held at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Charles Mendenhall.

A picnic dinner was served in their beautiful yard and all enjoyed the birthday cakes, it being Mrs. J. H. Mendenhall and Jimmie Lappens birthdays. Family pictures were taken as it is the first time all of Mr. and Mrs. J. H. Mendenhalls' children had been home at once in 15 years. Sixty guests were present.
