A LAUNCHING SITE IS NEEDED.....

The boating season is upon us. Sunday a half dozen boats were zooming up and down the Chetco. We're not sure just how they did get in the river, but likely they had friends who had access, or else they fought their way down to the mouth of the river, across private property, at the risk of getting the car and trailer stuck in the sand. Or perhaps the person managed to back it down to one of the private anchorages, who would, we believe much rather rent a boat, or take him out on a charter craft, than let him park his car in a limited area.

Consequently, we know that a boat launching spot--for use by the general public, should be high on the plans now being formulated by the Brookings Port Commission. Comes the day when the jetties are completed, that many fishermen coming over from the valley with a trailer and boat will want to put in at the Chetco. If those people can't find a launching spot here they certainly aren't going to stop. Not when such facilities are available elsewhere on the coast.

We know that the Port Commission has made definite overtures to the State Highway department, and the State Fish and Game group about the possibility of installing a public site in Brookings. We think that it is of the utmost public concern, and thus in the interest of the Port Commission to push this at every possible opportunity.
