Identifying Artists

One way of proving the identity of a canvas is by the examination of the brush stroke. As one art critic has said: "The brush strokes of a painter are as individual as the handwriting of a writer."

The following letter was received from our good friend Uncle Perry Cornelius, which we take the liberty to publish:

Colfax, Washington
January 21, 1926.

Dear Mr. Rowley.

Herewith is my check for which please extend my subscription two years. I know I must be considerably behind in payments. I must have the Tribune if all else has to stop for it gives me so much news that it is just like getting a letter from an old friend who undertakes to tell all the news and then some.

We are having a little snow; commenced yesterday and now, lo, 10:20 a.m., it is about four inches deep and commencing to thaw. The little boys will be sorry if the snow does not lay on as they are extremely anxious to try out their sleds. Colfax has many places suitable for coasting and the boys and girls have more real sport than those who live in warm, sunny climates.

This leaves us all well as usual. I have a little "tetch ux rheumatics" but that is usual with me.

Yours very truly,
O. H. P. Cornelius.

TURNER DEFEATS GERVAIS

Last Friday night the Turner high school basketball teams went to Gervais to play the first game between the Gervais and Turner high school teams.

The Gervais girls won from the Turner girls by a score of 15 to 25. Owing to the short floor it was necessary for the girls to play with three forwards.

The Turner boys won from the Gervais boys by a score of 19 to 18. The score in the first half stood 4 to 9 in favor of Turner, but by lack of guarding the Gervais boys were able to run the score up on the Turner team until the score stood 17 to 18 in Gervais' favor. Just before the whistle blew Pearson got a basket just in time to save the score for Turner.
