BANK ROBBERS CONVICTED.

One Wounded and Turns State's Evidence—Will Board With Supt. Gilbert, of Salem

Sheriff Forsythe, of Wallowa county, recently lodged David Tucker and Ben Owenby in the "pen" for a seven years, term each for the part they played in the Joseph bank robbery last fall. The Statesman comments as follows:

The two last named were convicted of robbing the bank at Joseph, on October 1, 1896, when three men entered the bank about 3 o'clock, and after covering four customers of the bank, and Acting-Cashier J. D. McCully, secured about $2000. The populace of the town having been aroused the robbers attempted to make their escape, when the robber, who had the sack of money, was shot down. Tucker was wounded and only one man escaped, carrying with him the sack of money which he had taken from his dead comrade. Later Tucker, the wounded robber, turned state's evidence implicating John Martin, a saloon keeper, and Benjamin Owenby, two well-known characters. These were promptly arrested and thus far Owenby and Tucker have been convicted and now occupy cells in the penitentiary.

Poisons engendered by food fermenting in a dyspeptic stomach are the direct cause of rheumatism, gout, bronchitis, liver and kidney complaints, asthma, pneumonia and many nervous ailments

These results are prevented by the use of the Shaker Digestive Cordial, a remedy discovered and prepared by the Shakers of Mount Lebanon, N. Y. It is in itself a food and has power to digest other food taken with it. Thus it rests the diseased stomach and finally masters the worst cases of dyspepsia. It acts promptly and fresh strength and increase of weight soon follows. The first dose, taken immediately after eating, abates the pain and distress so dreaded by dyspeptics. The Best Remedy for Rheumatism.

From the Fairhaven, N. Y., Register.

Mr. James Rowland of this village, states that for twenty-five years his wife has been a sufferer from rheumatism. A few nights ago she was in such pain that she was nearly crazy. She sent Mr. Rowland for the doctor, but he had read of Chamberlain's Pain Balm and instead of going for the physician he went to the store and secured a bottle of it. His wife did not approve of Mr. Rowland's purchase at first, but nevertheless applied the Balm thoroughly and in an hour's time was able to go to sleep. She now applies it whenever she feels an ache or pain and finds that it always gives relief. He says that no medicine which she had used ever did her so much good. When those atrocious bodily troubles, chills and fever, dyspepsia, kidney or rheumatic disorders, yield, as they invariably do, to the benign action of Hostetter's Stomach Bitters, a remedy of comprehensive use, pure in composition, unobjectionable to a delicate palate, and thorough in effects. Sick headaches, loss of appetite, flesh and sleep, nausea, heartburn, are among the physical annoyances obviated by the Bitters. They are in the nature of signals of distress displayed by a disordered stomach liver and bowels, and disappear with the cause that produced them. But these signals should be heeded at once. Then the woe-begone look of chronic ill health will speedily disappear, and vigor and comfort restore a cheerful aspect to the face. That faithful index to the condition of the system never fails to wear a look of sunshine when the Bitters is used to dispel the cloud.

LITERARY NOTES.

The May Magazine Number of The Outlook has half a dozen illustrated articles, and a great variety of other reading matter. Mr. Justin McCarthy's "Story of Gladstone's Life" deals largely with Gladstone's visit to Greece in 1858, and much of it is pertinent to the present international situation. Charles Wagner, the famous author of "Youth," writes of Paris in the "Higher Life of European Cities;" the accompanying pictures are many and fine. Mrs. Arthur M. Dodge tells of the "Development of the Day Nursery Idea." Mr. Charles H. Crandall, in "A Quest of Gray Shingles," writes pleasantly of quaint old houses, and several of these houses are here pictured. In lighter literature a strong story by Octave Thanet, some dialect poems by Paul Dunbar, the negro poet, and an appreciative article upon Henry Van Dyke and his work, are prominent features [$3 a year. BALDNESS A DISEASE.

A French Doctor Says It May Be Prevented.

The Contagion Scattered by Barbers on Whose Implements the Microbes Find Lodgment.

Now the real cause of baldness has been discovered, and a French dermatologist, Dr. Labourand, suggests a remedy. By the use of this remedy, he says, baldness can be prevented, and in the next generation it may be unknown.

Can the awful consequence of such a discovery be imagined? Can people of this generation contemplate such a social condition as a total lack of baldness? What will the ballet girl do without that inspiring row of shining pates just beyond the footlight? What will the funny man do, deprived of his fund of baldheaded jokes? Hair will grow in vulgar abundance.

It has been known for some time among medical men that baldness is a disease. It has even been supposed to be due to a specific microbe. In fact, such an extraordinary amount of evidence in favor of the theory has been accumulated that the idea is now generally accepted. Dr. Labourand's investigation in the subject has been exhaustive and of such a conclusive nature as to add heavy reinforcements to the already existing microbic theory. He believes that the disease is contagious and that the cause of contagion and the spreading of microbes is due to the barber's instruments. He presents strong evidence in support of this theory.

According to Labourand the typical diseased hair is found at the edge of a constantly enlarging bald spot. It is the stump of what was once a long hair. It is shaped like an interrogation point; it grows less in diameter toward the root, and has lost its color, being either gray or white. The normal pith canal is wanting at the root, which is itself no longer bulbous and hollowed for the papilla, but distorted in shape and hardened. Within the root sac a little bulb may be seen developing if examined under the magnifying glass. It is this which is said to be the cause of the disease.

In the good hair this bulb or uticule is full and closed, and contains in its center compact clusters of microbes, a culture of the smallest bacillus known. As the microbe matures it may become one one-hundredth of an inch in width. is bent or slightly curved in shape, like a comma, blunt at the ends and slightly swollen in the center. Each bulb contains millions of these bacilli, and to them is attributed the cause of baldness.

Investigation shows that by the time the hair is dead and the root and rebaceous glands useless the microbe which produced this effect is gone. Thus remedies applied to the bald spot in the hope of making hair grow again are vain. For that glistening, white desert is totally barren of productive roots, and the oily sacs are dried forever.

However, the progress of baldness can be impeded. This is accomplished by disinfection of the skin at the edge and in the neighborhood of the patch by means of an effectual, microbe-destroying tonic.

If the microbe of baldness is an actual fact, as seems fairly probable, and if the prevalence of the condition is due to contagion, as is the reasonable and logical deduction, baldness can be prevented and the first stages of the disease arrested by intelligent treatment. So, in time, baldness may disappear from humanity.—Chicago Times-Herald.

OYSTERS AND TYPHOID.

The Bivalves Capable of Causing Disease.

It is not likely that the public will read, or even see, the elaborate report on the oyster and the typhoid question just issued by the local government board, and therefore we beg them not to be alarmed at the comments that are appearing in the press on the subject. Report does not warrant an alarmist view. It contains, it is true, the abundant justification for having raised the question. Oysters are now proved, not only in this country but in France and the United States, to be capable of causing, and to have actually caused, typhoid fever. And the investigation of the oyster beds on our coasts, carried out by Dr. Bulstrode for the local government board, shows that in several places oysters are exposed to the risk of conveying the disease. They are placed for fattening in shallow water near the foreshore, and so close to sewer outfalls as to be pretty constantly bathed by sewage. The worst places in this respect are Southend, Grimsby, Shoreham and the Isle of Wight. On the other hand, Whitstable and several other famous beds are beyond suspicion, while a third class is only theoretically open to danger. But the most comforting point brought out by the report is that even in the worst cases the danger can be removed without difficulty. Now that the government has pointed the way, it is for the local authorities to carry out the necessary reforms, and for oyster consumers to insist that they are carried out.—St. James Gazette.

MUSIC IN NERVOUS DISORDERS.

Alleged Cure of a Child Due to Chopin's Somber Waltzes.

The value of music in the treatment of certain forms of nervous diseases has before now been called attention to by physicians. One advantage perhaps of this therapeutical agency is that in the event of its doing no good it is not likely to do harm. In a recent number of the Gazette Medicale attention was drawn to the remarkable result attending the administration of music to a little girl of three, who was afflicted with serious nervous disorders, resulting in epilepsy and paroxysms of fear, which kept her awake all night. The ordinary remedies, including bromide of potassium, were tried without any effect, and at last the physician recommended the mother to play some soft, rather melancholy music to her daughter before putting her to bed. Chopin was recommended, especially the waltzes in the minor key. The remedy worked like a charm, for it is said that from the night the child went to bed under the influence of music she lost all her nervous symptoms and slept without waking until the morning. In order to prove that this was not the result of mere chance, the music was omitted on one evening, and the child passed a night of misery, not so intense as before the adoption of the treatment, but still very marked.

Wool Growers!

With McKinley in the White House, we predict higher prices for wool during the coming season, and feel assured that Heppner will attract more Eastern buyers than formerly. Their headquarters will be at the

and it will be to your interests to store your wool with us. Insurance rates are also much cheaper than last year.

We furnish wool sacks and twine to patrons payable when wool is sold. We pay freight to teamsters, and furnish blank receipts to woolgrowers on application.

We have on hand rolled barley and feed for teamsters.

We pay the highest cash price for sheep pelts and hides.

We are agents for Little's Fluid Dip, and the famous Black Leaf Tobacco Dip.

Mark your wool sacks (N) and direct your teamsters to the lower Warehouse, Heppner, Oregon.
