The Mayflower Mining Co. are pushing their tunnel into the mountain, working night and day with a machine operated by compressed air. The appearances at the breast of the tunnel indicate the presence of an ore body not far in advance.

Claude Dunham and Miss Mary Wiltse, of Hay Creek, were united in marriage one day last week, but we are unable to state just when, and in the future we suggest that newlywedded couples interview the newspaper man. Both the parties are well known Mr. Dunham being a Crook county boy. The JOURNAL wishes them the greatest success in life.

At the annual school meeting held last Monday in this district, Dr. H. P. Belknap was elected director in place of J. N. Williamson, whose term has expired and M. R. Elliott was unanimously reelected clerk, this being an endorsement of Mr. Elliott's careful and painstaking conduct of that office for several years past.

C. W. Elkins has built a collection of curios including some fine specimens of petrified wood. He also has a penchant for chore boys but is short on them now. It happened in this way. A few days ago he engaged a peripatetic wanderer of German persuasion to chore around for what he could eat. Part of his duties was to keep the fires going, but they proved too onerous. He allowed the fires to burn low and being told to replenish them did so, but still the rooms were chilly. Upon examination of the stoves Mr. Elkins found them filled with the finest specimens of his petrified wood and, looking further, found his 'wanderer' basking in the sun on the back porch. Then the air turned blue in that vicinity and the chore boy stood not upon the order of his going.

GROCERIES.

Richet & Co., wholesale grocers of Portland, will have their representative, C. E. Dawson, located at Poindexter Hotel on Thursday, Friday and Saturday, March 7, 8, 9. He will be pleased to quote you prices whether you buy or not. Call and post yourselves at least and know what profit you are paying on everything you eat. Or drop him a card and he will call at your residence. Goods to be delivered by June 1. No orders taken under $20

Scalp Bounty Muddle.

The new scalp bounty law which went into effect Feb. 26, is a well devised law so far as its future operation is concerned, but that portion of it, Sec. 8, which attempts to provide for scalp certificates which had not been canvassed by the county courts when the law went into effect, is a muddle characteristic of Oregon legislation. By its terms, the holder of such certificate must present it to the county clerk and make affidavit that he killed it (the coyote of course) etc., when a county warrant will be issued to him. Now, nearly all such certificates are in the hands of second parties, the person to whom it was issued perhaps 75 miles away, and the scalps in the hands of a notary somewhere else. The notary dare not deliver the scalp to the holder of the certificate and he cannot get his certificate changed to a county warrant without it. And there you are in a situation as clear as mud. How simple and easy it would have been to have provided that all uncanvassed certificates issued up to the date when the new law took effect should be canvassed as before and that upon surrender to county clerks a warrant should be issued in lieu thereof. We presume senatorial matters so engrossed the attention of our lawmakers that the defects of this bill were overlooked.

Wool Market is Lifeless.

Wool is worth one third less now than it was one year ago, according to the statement of prominent sheepmen and woolbuyers. An example is that of Grant Horn, who, a year ago, contracted his clip at 14½ cents a pound, and can secure no quotations above 9½ to 10 cents now. Furthermore, buyers appear to be doing nothing, a slump in the market accounting for their indifference to the offerings. Last year at this time buyers were arriving from the east anxious to write contracts for all the wool they could get at prices ranging about the 14 or 15 cent mark. All the wool of Wallowa county was taken before shearing time and immense quantities bought under contract in other Eastern Oregon counties. At the present time there is not a woolgrower in the country making any effort to effect purchases, with one possible exception.

The high prices of last spring caused a large number of growers to hold their clip this year for as good if not a better figure, with the result that a drop compelled them to sell for less, or hold their clip until this year. Fred. E. Judd, manager of the Pendleton scouring mills, states that the Noble clip, the largest in Idaho, was shipped here to the mills, offers of 55 cents being made for the scoured product and 45 cents for the inferior grades. This was refused. Mr. Noble at a latter date was able to get only 40 cents for the latter of his wool and that figure could not be secured at the present time.

Unless the market stiffens the bulk of the 1901 wools in this region will be held until late in the season, perhaps over into 1902. The sheep men are in easy circumstances, are now and have been able to hold their clips when the state of the market was unsatisfactory. The banks willingly extend accommodation for unlimited time to all who are in the wool business.

One year ago there were 160,000 sheep in Umatilla county, according to the returns of the County Livestock Inspector. Today there are 267,000 sheep here. One year ago eastern buyers were making many inquiries for sheep and later sent their buyers. In the spring 20,000 were bought and shipped from this county. These were for feeding in Montana and the Dakotas. At this time, scarcely an inquiry is coming from the east and several buyers, who have come annually to this country, have written that they will not come this year. The concensus of opinion appears to be that nearly all who shipped east to feed last year lost on the average 50 cents a head. One buyer writes that sheep must drop 75 cents a head below last year's prices, else he will not make any purchases.

Another element in the rather unfavorable situation is the scarcity of range lands, in proportion to the number of sheep owned in this region. A year ago, with something like 100,000 less sheep than are now in the country the sheep men were bothered to find sufficient forage for their flocks, and the difficulty will apparently be greater during the season just opening.—Pendleton cor. to Oregonian.
