In the Interest of Good Roads

Thomas E. Whiteside, representing the firm of Beall & Co. of Portland, was in Prineville this week in the interests of good roads. Mr. Whiteside has a proposition that looks good to a man fn favor of good roads. His house will furnish a 10-ton motor roller and portable rock crusher for $5000 f. o. b. Portland. The motor is 25 h. p. and furnishes the power for the crusher. The total expense of running the plant, including wages and gasoline, is $7.50 a day.

Mr. Whiteside maintains that with one of these plants Crook county in a few years would have good roads in all directions. The worst places could be fixed up immediately and then the work could be taked up systematically. We certainly need better roads and the merits of this plan should be investigated.

Mr. Whiteside also took up a plan with some of the members of the city council to oil the streets. An oil plant, including a wagon, would cost $600. Two oilings the first year and one thereafter would be sufficient to lay the dust. Where oil has been tried it is said to be away ahead of water sprinkling and much cheaper in the long run. The initial cost would be greater but in a few years a crust would form that would give us smooth dustless streets. What a relief it would be.

A Destructive Timber Pest

B. F. Harvey, who has been detailed to the bureau of entomology by the forest service, has been in Crook county investigating the cause of the death of many trees, both in the national forest and in private holdings. Mr. Harvey was in Prineville the first of the week and in conversation with a Journal reporter regarding the pest said:

"The sudden dying of extensive areas of timber in Eastern Oregon during the last few years has been the cause of much alarm among the timber owners of this country.

The cause of the recent extensive loss in the timber resources of Oregon is due chiefly to the attack of the Mountain Pine beetle. (Dendroctonaus Monticolae). This beetle emerges from the trees in swarms during July and immediately attacks the choicest living standing timber. It bores holes through the bark of the tree and then excavates a vertical main gallery of six or twelve inches in length just between the bark and sap wood in the growing portion of the tree. Along this main gallery eggs are deposited about every half inch. These eggs hatch into minute white larvae or grubs which in feeding excavate horizontal secondary galleries around the trunk of the tree in its living tissue. The larvae grows rapidly and soon changes into a pupa in which stage it passes the winter. The following summer the pupa again changes into the adult beetle which in time emerges and attacks new trees. The adult is a short, thick-set black beetle about one-fourth of an inch long. Where this beetle enters the tree small pitch tubes will be found and where it emerges many small shot holes appear. The larva or grub stage of the beetle is most destructive as it is feeding heavily at this period. The death of the tree is caused by the larva galleries cutting off the sap supply of the tree. This beetle usually attacks the lodgepole pine first, but is capable of attacking and killing the yellow pine.

The Black Hills beetle in South Dakota, a close relative of the Mountain Pine beetle, has killed a billion feet of the best standing yellow pine timber.

Throughout Northeastern Oregon this Mountain Pine beetle has already done considerable damage, and steps for the control of this insect pest are being taken. The simplest method of control yet found is to cut and peel the bark of the newly infested trees sometime between September 1st. and June 1st. of the following year.

The bark of the newly infested trees only need be pealed. This is simply scattered on the ground and the dying out of the bark together with the exposure results in the death of the beetle.

Thus far on the Deschutes National forest comparatively few infested areas have been found and it is hoped that control work will soon be started by the forest service in order to eradicate these centers of infestation and thus prevent a widespread depredation and the dead loss of millions of feet of valuable timber. Private interests once announced co-operative control work on infested areas outside the forest could be carried on to great advantage at small expense. It is hoped that all vitally interested will consider this seriously. Immediate action will prevent heavy losses.

A Chance to Win a Beautiful Silver Cup

Through its general immigration department, the Great Northern Railroad has offered to post prizes consisting in each instance of two cups and 100 first and 100 second prize ribbons for five agricultural fairs to be held in Oregon this year.

The offer has been made to the officials of the state fair at Salem and managers of the fairs at Prineville, Burns, Lakeview and Eugene. The conditions governing the awards of the cups at the four county fairs are left largely to the fair managements.

The Great Northern has also reserved 150 feet of space at the Dry Farming Congress, which will be held at Spokane October 3-6. F. W. Graham, Western immigration agent, yesterday announced that the products will be sent to the Dry Farming Congress and exhibited there before being placed in the car.

Commenting on the offer of the Great Northern Railroad to give ribbons and silver cups for exhibits at the local fair yesterday, members of the local board said that they had not been informed direct of the matter yet, but as soon as such information arrived they would arrange for the handling of the awards and notify through the press of the county, their decision in the matter.

Preperations for the coming fair are progressing, and a better fair than ever before is promised.

The beautiful cup which is shown herewith will be awarded for the best Oregon exhibit at the International Dry Farming Exposition at Spokane next November. The cup is offered by the Portland Commercial Club and its value is about $50.

The conditions attending its award are that the produce exhibited must be grown in Oregon on arid or semi-arid lands without irrigation. On one side of the cup is an inscription giving the donor and the requirements to be met and on the opposite side is a blank space where the name of the winner will be engraved. It is a handsome piece of silver, standing nearly a foot high on a solid ebony base.
