Notice to Laundry Patrons

The prevailing cost of household material and articles of wearing apparel is so excessive as to make it absolutely necessary that a limit be placed upon the responsibility of laundries for articles lost or damaged.

The laundry charges you for the service of cleaning only. This charge is exceedingly low when the increased cost of production, due to advances in labor, fuel and supplies is taken into consideration, and they can not consistently charge an amount sufficient to cover excessive claims without a material increase in price, practically prohibitive to the customer.

The laundries employ the best labor obtainable for the class of work they perform. To solve the complex problem of handling thousands of a similar class of articles, we use an efficient system, which is a marvel to the public, adopted after many years of careful study and survey. However, in spite of all our efforts, it is impossible to eliminate the human element of errors.

The higher values tend to make customers more exacting, and the tendency of the times to the wearing of silks and high priced articles of clothing makes some provision absolutely necessary that will cause the customer to share the responsibility with the laundry.

Therefore, all work accepted will be at the risk of the customers, except where the original list is promptly brought in with the claim for shortage or damage, and in no case will responsibility be assumed to exceed ten times the laundry charges on the article lost or damaged. Please attach your count to your package or accept our count as correct.

Every reasonable care will be exercised to protect our customers in the future as in the past, and the reputation built up in years of service justifies the public in having confidence that only the unavoidable condition of the present time encouraging vandalism, and affecting the reliability of help, will lessen the reliability of this concern.
