CAPITOL PUTS BAN ON DRUNKS

WASHINGTON, D. C., July 1.—If the provisions of the new Jones-Works exercise law, which became operative today, are strictly enforced the national capital will probaly become the most unpopular place on the map in the eyes of those who are in the habit of indulging too freely in liquns stronger than grape juice. Enforcement of the new law will put an end to the practice of the police, common to almost all American cities, of releasing persons arrested for drunkenness after they have sobered up

The act stipulates that a charge of misdeameanor must be made against a person arrested for drunkenness on the street or in any public place, and that upon conviction he shall be punished by a fine of not less than $10 nor more than $100, or by imprisonment for not less than five days nor more than thirty days. It is anticipated that the prospect of a public trial and a few days on the stone pile at Occoquan will cause a regular New York rush for the water wagon now that the law has come into effect.
