BLACKBERRY CULTURE.

Planting May Be Done in the Fall or Spring.

The blackberry may be planted in the fall or early in the spring. But if planted too early in the fall young growth may start, which is likely to be winter killed. The soil should be well prepared and the plants set a little deeper than they were in the nursery in rows about eight feet apart and three feet apart in the rows. Some growers prefer planting them in hills seven or eight feet apart each way, thus finding them easier to control. Larger fruit is so produced, as they can be kept cultivated both ways. Summer pruning is important with the blackberry, as the lower the canes can be kept the better they are likely to come through the winter and the easier they are to handle. Summer pruning consists in merely pinching back the young growth to within about eighteen inches of the ground, after which side shoots will be thrown out. It is better to err on the side of low pinching than to let the canes get too tall.

The summer pruning may if delayed cause late growth, which will not ripen, hence it should be done in time or not at all. In the spring the laterals should be headed back to within eight or ten inches or two feet of the main canes. Old canes and the weakest of new ones should be cut out in the fall or early in the spring each year. There will be a light crop of fruit the second year and a full crop the third year. Four or five full crops are about as much as should be taken from one plantation.

The blackberry is not grown as largely as it might be. It is one of the most profitable fruits to grow where it succeeds well. Where there is no danger of winter killing a well drained clay loam is probably best for the blackberry, as it is cooler and more retentive of moisture than lighter soils. The blackberry must have plenty of soil moisture when the fruit is ripening, otherwise but little of the crop will develop. In the north where hardiness is of greater consideration than conservation of moisture the poorer and warmer soils are preferred, as the blackberry on these soils does not make as rampant a growth and hence ripens its wood better.

The berry patch shown in the cuts was pruned late in August. One-fifth of an acre yielded 100 bushels.

PROLIFIC BLACKBERRIES—100 BUSHELS TO FIFTH OF AN ACRE.

Moles Friends of the Farmer.

A distinguished naturalist carefully examined the stomachs of fifteen moles caught in different localities, but failed to discover therein the slightest vestige of plants or roots; on the contrary, they were filled with the remains of earthworms. Not satisfied by this fact, he shut up several moles in a box containing soils of earth, on which fresh grass was growing, and a smaller cage of grubs and earthworms. In nine days two moles devoured 246 white worms, 108 earthworms, 25 caterpillars and a mouse with and bones, which had been alive in the box. He next gave them nothing but vegetables. In twenty-four hours two moles died of starvation. Another naturalist calculated that two moles destroyed 20,000 white worms or grubs in a single year. If this be correct it is a strong argument in favor of multiplying rather than destroying the moles.

The Open Top Tree.

It is not necessary to go over the tree trying to cut off every little twig. The leaders are the ones that need attention. When heading in these leaders it is best to cut them off to a side branch rather than to dormant bud. Frequently when an inexperienced man practices heading in he is tempted to shear the tree all over and leave it a smooth, oval form. It will be seen that this is very different from the method described above, where only the leaders are cut back and the side shoots thinned so as to leave an open top. The amount of heading is to be done should vary from year to year, according as the crop promises to be large or small. As the tree gets older less heading is usually needed.

Sugar Beets.

Last year was a banner year for sugar beets, but the estimate is made by the United States department of agriculture that the present year will eclipse all past records, as it is expected all that over 500,000 short tons of beet sugar will be made.

WASTE OF THE FARMER.

Agricultural Reform the Most Urgent of Modern Problems.

George T. Powell recently wrote a letter on "The Farmer's Waste-fulness" which was printed in one of the eastern dailies. He declares that "the most urgent problem before our nation today is not the tariff, but the preservation of the great wastefulness in agricultural methods that occurs everywhere in the United States and the dissemination of scientific information that shall lead to soil restoration and improvement." The proposition is irrefutable.

Responsible authorities have estimated the amount of the food bill of the American people at a little more than $12,000,000,000 a year. That both the first cost and the retail price of most of the articles on the list could be and should be materially reduced there can be no question.

As Mr. Powell declares, very few of our farmers have even a vague notion of the cost of the products. The makers of farm implements, of clothing, hats, shoes, furniture and other articles bought by farmers, know to the fraction of a cent the cost of the raw material and the exact profit they make on each article. There are and there can be no wasteful or haphazard methods in manufacturing or in commercial business. The inevitable penalty of indifference to cost in these lines is failure. Except in rare instances, no other methods are followed on the farm. In that industry it is not the producer upon whom the penalty falls. The consumer pays for the waste, indifference and ignorance of the producer.

Because of sundry legends handed down from generation to generation there is a general belief that a farmer's life is of arduous and poorly rewarded toil. Much of that belief is utter nonsense. The average farmer works harder today than does the average man in any other line of industry. His reward is determined chiefly by the intelligence which he applies to his operations.

Elm Has a Cancer.

The famous Bertram elm in Salem, Mass., has a cancer. It was noticed for some time that an cavities showed on the elm. This was proof to the experienced eye that there was decay inside the tree.

An investigation showed that the elm had a cancer on the inside, which, if allowed to grow, would kill the tree in a few years. Incisions were made and portions of the inside were found to be punk. The ants had begun spreading inside this growth. Efforts are now being made to remove the cancer.

This elm is famed for its size and beauty. The trunk measures twenty-seven feet in circumference, and its age has been reckoned as 300 years. The estate was formerly the home of Captain John Bertram, one of Salem's fine old merchants of olden days.

Horse Love.

Be careful how you turn out to grass in the autumn a horse that has been accustomed to a dry stable.

He is poorly prepared to stay out in the cold rain, much less to lie on the wet ground.

The exposure is too great and can only work harm. Lung troubles may follow.

Nothing improves the coat of a horse so much or so quickly as a little ground flaxseed mixed with his daily grain ration.

Never feed or water a tired horse until he has rested at least an hour.

Sponge out the mouth and nose with cool water and rub the legs and body well as soon as the stable is reached.

If water has been withheld for a long time, give only a few swallows at a time.

As heavy work slackens, shorten on the heavy feed. Thousands of horses are ruined every year by overfeeding while on light work.

It is never well to give animals impure or muddy water, but the horse is especially apt to be affected badly by that practice. In fact, horses will not drink such water if they can help it. Do your best to help it.

Shoe every horse as lightly as is possible for the labor he is to perform and thus avoid needless concussion and jar to feet and legs.

After removing a saddle apply plenty of cold water with a sponge. This cleans the pores, and no injury or swelling will follow.

It is a good plan to girth a thick felt separately about the horse under a side saddle.

This affords a surface for the saddle to move on and lessens the danger of chafing or bruising.

Be sure that your bridle and saddle fit and are properly put on.

Never use a narrow bit. Buy the largest and easiest one that you can find.

According to the bulletin issued by the government crop reporting board, the condition of the cotton crop on Aug. 25 was 65.7 per cent of a normal crop as compared with 71.9 on July 25, 1909, and 76.3 on Aug. 25, 1908. Thus is briefly described in official language the heavy damage done the cotton crop by the July and August drought.

Instead of trying to get rid of worm feed—in the usual advertisement called "adipose tissue"—by drugging the system with anti-fat dopes the sensible person will adopt a simpler and less expensive remedy—eat half as much food and perform twice as much physical labor. This will usually be found effective in reducing the most obstinate cases.

Running exclusively to one line has drawbacks as well as advantages in agricultural pursuits as well as in some other vocations. The raising of diversified crops may not yield as large financial returns as a single line under specially favorable conditions for the latter, but in a series of years the average returns from diversified crops will be larger, while if conditions are unfavorable the farmer will lose only part of the eggs in his basket.

Nature intended that the cow in her primal state should give just enough milk to suckle the calf at her side until it reached an age when it had acquired a taste as well as a capacity for digesting other forms of food. Any cow of later day whose calf is allowed to run with her tends to deteriorate in the matter of milk production until she reaches the above standard. On this account the practice should be discouraged with any animal that has capacity for dairy purposes.

One of the interesting sights to the visitor at Miles City, Mont., is the horse sale, which is held every two or three months. During the course of the year 30,000 horses change hands at these sales, while the type of horses disposed of varies from the absolutely wild yearling cayuse, which has not known bridle or saddle and very likely has never seen a cowboy to know who he was, which sells for $20, to the pure bred draft or coach horse, which sells from $150 and up.

QUARTERS FOR THE FLOCK

To keep healthy and thrive sheep should be provided with quarters suitable to their needs. It is essential that their quarters be separate from other stock. Sheep prefer seclusion from other farm animals. They get along with young calves probably better than with any other stock. In discussing this phase of flock management Professor Henry says:

"Above every other animal on the farm, the sheep to be profitable must be kept dry as to coat and feet. Inattention to either of these essentials will result disastrously. With dry quarters sheep will stand a considerable degree of cold without inconvenience. Indeed, their quarters should not be as warm as for other animals. One thickness of closely matched boards will make the barn or shed where the sheep are confined sufficiently warm in the northern states except for winter lambs. Ventilation is of great importance and should be ample, care being taken to avoid direct drafts.

"The amount of space provided for each sheep will vary with the size of the animal. A ewe weighing 150 pounds will require about ten square feet of ground space, while one weighing 250 pounds should have about fifteen square feet. A space 40 by 40 feet square will therefore accommodate about 150 sheep weighing 150 pounds each or 100 weighing 200 pounds each, not allowing for feed racks. Provide fifteen inches running length of feed rack for each sheep weighing 150 pounds and two feet for those weighing 200 pounds."

A shed open on the south on well drained ground and not over twenty feet wide makes an ideal place for sheep. It also makes a very satisfactory place to cure for the lambs when they come. Pens can easily be made by the use of panels or hurdles.

A CHESTNUT RAMBOUILLET RAM.

Provide wide, shallow troughs for feeding that can be cleaned regularly. Don't expect the lambs, whether range or native, to do well unless they have clean food and clean water as well. Salt is also valuable in getting the lambs started on grain, and it should be given throughout the feeding period and always regularly.

The most successful lamb feeder is the man who studies the needs of the lambs closest. In short, this requires that a man love to be among them, treat them kindly always and be ready to give intelligent attention to their needs at all times.

Getting the lambs on a grain ration is the most critical period, and a close watch should be kept. It has been said that lambs are the poor man's friends, but this does not imply that they can be fed and finished on a feed of weeds and an occasional feed of grain. The better the grading and the more suited the ration the better price the lambs will bring on the market.

Sheep pay for extra care expended on them as well as any other kind of animals. They respond to feed and good management in a way that is pleasing to every observing person and thereby keep more vigorous and healthy and produce more wool and stronger, larger lambs.

Swiss Goats.

A herd of five imported Swiss milk goats has just been received at the farm of the agricultural experiment station at the University of Wisconsin for comparative tests on the breeding and rearing of milk goats to determine their usefulness, economy of milk production and relation to other classes of live stock. This type of goats, known as the Schweizerstamm-Gebirgsziegen breed, is noted for its large milk production, the milk being of particular value for infants and invalids, since goats are practically immune to tuberculosis. These goats are kept in Switzerland as a chief source of food for poor people. There are very few in the United States, and this is believed to be the first time a careful test of their usefulness has been attempted in this country.

Heaves Hard to Cure.

There is no cure for heaves after the disease is thoroughly established. In such cases the lungs are broken down in structure and medicine does not repair the damage. Give half an ounce of Fowler's solution of arsenic night and morning. Wet all feed. Feed grass in summer and wet or straw in preference to hay. Allow double the usual period of rest before working after meals.

Swine of Uniform Color.

The herd of swine should be of not form color, and the lots of swine for market should be of as near uniform size, shape and color as possible. The packers pay more for the kind of hogs.

Dilemal.

A handful of oilmeal daily in the horse's ration will help put a glossy coat on him.

Bacteria Keep Busy.

To cool the cream quickly and thoroughly just as soon as the separating is finished is of more importance than anything else at that particular time. The pigs and calves can wait for their skimmilk, but bacteria in the cream wait for nothing until the temperature favorable to their growth is reduced.
