Game of Spillikens.

Collect a number of straws, stand them up so as to meet at the top and spread out at the bottom like a tent or haystack. Get nice little sticks and make a hook at the end with a crooked pin or else find little hooked sticks. Each player takes a hook in turn and tries to remove a straw without shaking or throwing down any of the others. The one who succeeds in removing a straw under these difficult conditions counts one. She who gets most straws wins the game.

Sometimes two or three straws are marked and called king, queen and bishop. The king, safely removed, counts four, the queen three and the bishop two. The straws thus named should be larger than the others or have a tiny flower stuck in their hollow tubes to distinguish them from the plain spillikens.

Hide the Thimble.

In this game the company generally divides in two parts, half being players, while the rest do the work of guessing. A thimble is then produced by one of the party or something equally small that may easily be held in the hand. Seated by the side of the table, the players begin passing the article from hand to hand. When the work has been done sufficiently the closed hands are all placed on the table for those on the opposite side to guess in turn whose hand holds the thimble. As soon as the right guess is made the opposite side takes its turn.

Button Puzzle.

Place twelve buttons or stones in a hollow square so that you count four along each side of it.

Now take the same buttons and arrange them so that they form another square and you can count five along each side of it.

Solution: Make a square with three on every side and place the remaining four, one on each of the corner buttons.

Moving Time.

When moving time comes round, alas,
The dollies dread what comes to pass!
They hear their little mother say:
"I'll have to give some toys away.
They say I cannot take them all,
For we must store them till the fall.
I wonder which I'll keep, dear, dear!"
Oh, how the dollies dread to hear
Those words, for fear she has in mind
Perhaps to leave some doll behind!

But moving day comes round and goes,
And when the fall arrives it shows
The dollies all together still.
Their little mother never will
The family circle break, oh, no!
She loves each precious dolly so!
The other toys of many styles
She gives away, but always smiles
And says, "Of course, my dolls, you see,
Must always, always go with me!"
