LAS PALABRAS.

It was on the homeward voyage from Buenos Ayres, in the Royal Mail steamer Plata, that I chanced to meet "Don Miguel." He was always so addressed by his South American friends aboard, but his real name was Michael Corner. He was an Englishman and had been for many years an extensive owner of property in the Argentine, which, however, he had sold, and was now returning home to good.

One evening he told me a great deal about South America and its customs.

"I hate the place," he remarked meditatively, puffing at his cheroot, "not only because of sad associations, but because of a kind of half superstitious horror with which it is invested in my eyes and which I can scarcely define. Had it not been for the cursed native customs of the place my elder brother Tom, my partner there for many years, who died not long ago, would have been alive at the present moment and probably coming home with me now."

I suppose that I looked surprised, for the don continued:

"My brother Tom came up to my place one day, about five years ago now, and told me that he had resolved to discontinue giving the ordinary remedies to ailing cattle.

"'Indeed?' I returned. 'Well, what do you intend to use instead?'

"'Las Palabras,' he replied, laughing. 'I have got the secret.'

"'You are joking,' I said. 'Surely you don't believe in that humbug?'

"'I didn't once, but I do now,' he replied quietly, 'for I have tried it and found it works admirably.'

"'Well, Mike, my boy,' he said, smiling, 'laugh away, but come down and see for yourself. You won't laugh if I save our medicine bill on the estancia every year, will you?'

"The end of it was that I did go down, and I was convinced against my own will by what I saw. So would any one have been. There was no mistake, no possibility of it, in the experiments my brother conducted before me.

"'How did you get it?—the secret, I mean—for I suppose it's no use asking you what the words are.'

"'That is the curious part of it,' he returned. 'You know Pedro Viejo—Pedro the peon? Well, he was very ill lately—thought he was dying, and so did every one else. In return for a certain provision to be made for his widow he offered to reveal to me the secret of Las Palabras, of which he alone in the neighborhood was possessed. I consented, handed over the number of animals he demanded, and, in return, he imparted to me the formula, which, as I told you, works uncommonly well. But'—

"'But what?'

"'Well, you see, old Pedro didn't die after all. He got better and soon was all right again. Now he wants his power back again—which, of course, he can't have.'

"'Can't have?' I echoed.

"'No, of course not! Once you communicate the formula to any one, you lose the power yourself, and also the ability to impart it to others. Pedro can't cure a single animal now, otherwise he wouldn't bother about getting back the power, would he? And I have the power which he had and use it every day. The only chance of his ever regaining the power is that I should die before him. In that event it is said that he would recover the faculty of curing.'

"'He doesn't want money, he says; he wants his power back again, which is just the one thing he cannot have. I can't give it back to him if I wished to do so.'

"It flashed upon me that, though my brother evidently did not see it in that light, he had given Pedro the peon a direct interest in his death.

"I didn't say anything to Tom then, but when I went again to Las Palmas I had a long talk with him, pointing out where I thought his danger lay, but he only laughed at me. Finally I advised him to impart the blessed thing to some one else.

"'What!' gasped Tom, 'and pay $150 a year for medicines once more? No, I thank you!'

"As we parted at the gateway a man followed closely at our heels, whom I knew to be Pedro. I could see that Tom instinctively shunned him, but he followed us doggedly nevertheless.

"'Well, Pedro, what is it?' said my brother at length, turning round upon him.

"'Las Palabras, senor, Las Palabras!' repeated the peon, with a pitiful gesture of entreaty. 'Las Palabras!'"

Don Miguel paused so long at this stage that I thought his narrative had ended, but he went on again after a little in a somewhat altered voice:

"About four months after this I went down to Las Palmas. When I arrived, my brother was absent. He had ridden over in the morning to an estancia out Frayle Muerto way, so his housekeeper informed me.

"I waited his return hour after hour. Then I grew anxious. At last I saddled my horse and set out in the direction in which he had gone. I cannot tell what possessed me to do this; perhaps it was because that ceaseless refrain, 'Las Palabras, Las Palabras!' kept ringing in my head.

"I had ridden about 10 miles when I suddenly caught sight of Tom's black horse. It was riderless and grazing. Then I knew there was something wrong.

"Close by the riderless horse two bodies were lying motionless. They were those of my brother and Pedro. The peon was quite dead, with a bullet wound in his forehead. Tom was dying from internal bleeding, having been shot in the chest, and was quite unconscious. Having tried in vain to revive him, I galloped back for assistance. When we returned, my brother had passed away.

"Can you wonder that I hate the Argentine and everything connected with it? Buenas noches, senor!"

* * * * * * *

I have only to add to Don Miguel's narrative that I have recently made inquiries regarding the formula of Las Palabras as used in the Argentine Republic and find the facts to be substantially as above related. Can any one afford a rational explanation of them?—London News.

The Moose Bird.

The moose bird takes life very seriously, and his sole business is stealing everything he can stick his bill into. Unless he is very often disturbed he is without fear and will readily slight on a stick held in your hand if you put a piece of meat on the end of the stick. I have often photographed the bird at a distance of three or four feet.—Frederic Inland in Scribner's.

Having a Great Run on Chamberlain's Cough Remedy.

Manager Martin, of the Pierson drug store, informs us that he is having a great run on Chamberlain's Cough Remedy. He sells five bottles of that medicine to one of any other kind, and it gives great satisfaction. In these days of la grippe there is nothing like Chamberlain's Cough Remedy to stop the cough, heal up the sore throat and lungs and give relief within a very short time. The sales are growing, and all who try it are pleased with its prompt action.—South Chicago Daily Calumet. For sale by W. L. DeLano.

A SHADOW.

Hans Allenus lived in a humble cottage in Jerusalem. One evening he stood long before the open window shutter. How difficult it was to get at closing it! The air was cool, the city still. Below in the narrow, hilly street came a muleteer astride, stooping forward over the back of the ass, whose little hoofs clicked and slipped on the big, smooth stones. He sang a monotonous song in the customary plaintive drawling, nasal tones of the easterner, and as he passed along the sound of his voice reminded one of the bagpipe.

On the window sill lay a manuscript dissertation, and so clear and brilliant was the February moonlight that Hans could read the fine writing without difficulty. It was a defense of the established order of things, of standstill conservatism, admitting of no exception. And as he stood there in the city where the idea of human brotherhood was born and had gone forth over the earth, as he glanced over the pages of the document, he said to himself: "No, no; we young people are natural foes to conservatism. We are the ones who now, in all ages, have broken ground for the truths which have proceeded from this city." As he spoke he made an unconscious movement with his hand. At the same time his glance fell upon his own shadow on the wall, outlined by the moon.

He could not restrain his laughter. Was not that the shadow of an actor, the head thrown back, the hand extended as if he were declaiming some stirring passage?

A feeling of shame swept over him as he considered for the first time that, among the ideas transmitted from that city to the western world as a cargo of precious jewels, was a tiny pearl, humanity.

He closed his eyes and pressed his hands over his face, and a thousand little stars seemed to flash before his sight. To be sure, it was merely the pulsations of his own blood which produced this sensation, and yet, little by little, those tiny lights ceased to revolve and looked for all the world like the pale stars which he had just been watching in the firmament. At length, aroused by voices in the street, he looked out.

Between the houses opposite there extended a wall. On the ground in front was a bright fire, and by that fire stood Christ surrounded by a few disciples and friends. Just behind him his shadow was clearly defined upon the wall.

John, the disciple whom he loved, mechanically picked up a blackened coal and with it outlined the shadow until he had delineated the entire figure of the Master upon the wall. Then he dropped the coal and entered into conversation with the rest.

Next morning, when Hans Allenus again stood at his open window and saw the people pass, there were many who stopped and looked with curiosity at the drawing on the wall.

"That represents a shoemaker; his back is bowed," said the shoemaker.

"You talk nonsense," returned the fruiterer; "that stooping posture proves that he is a fruit vender. They forgot to draw the basket on his back, but that half open mouth shows clearly that he was crying: 'Pomegranates! Come and buy! Come and buy!'"

A high official of the sanhedrin who passed, and who of course did not mix his voice with the gabble of the tradespeople, thought to himself: "It is perfectly plain that that represents a learned man and a thinker. One might almost take it to be a portrait of me. Positively it is me; not bad, either. Probably some of the tradespeople drew it. Of course they all know me more or less."

Meanwhile one of the spectators had silently approached the carbon drawing. He had a simple demeanor and a kind, patient face. Nothing great was known of him, no chronicle has preserved his name, for he led a retired life, away from the noise of the world. With hands crossed over the knob of his walking stick he contemplated the drawing.

"What a noble forehead!" he thought. "What lofty humanity that bent figure suggests! Oh, if only one could be like that! But why wish for the impossible!"

As he stood there, silent and humble, the likeness to the drawing was so striking that everybody fell back, pointing to him in whispers.

Startled and ashamed he slipped away, unable to understand why they should stare at him.

In his conscious humility he had resembled the Christ shadow.

Had he known this, and, proud in that consciousness, stood erect, the likeness would have vanished.—St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

Franklin No Orator.

It was Poor Richard who remarked, "Here comes the orator, with his flood of words and his drop of reason," and during his whole life Franklin was no speechmaker. "I served," Jefferson said, "with General Washington in the legislature of Virginia before the Revolution and during it with Dr. Franklin in congress. I never heard either of them speak ten minutes at a time nor to any but the main point which was to decide the question. They laid their shoulders to the great points, knowing that the little ones would follow themselves."

John Adams, in one of his periodic outbursts against the man whom the public deemed greater than himself, contrasted his own services in congress, in which he claimed to have been "active and alert in every branch of business, both in the house and on committees, constantly proposing measures, supporting those I approved when moved by others, opposing such as I disapproved, discussing and arguing on every question," with those of Franklin, who was seen, he says, "from day to day, sitting in silence, a great part of his time fast asleep in his chair."

Yet Franklin was appointed on every important committee and Adams on few, and the sage, could he have read his brother congressman's comparison, might fairly have retorted, with the wisdom of Poor Richard, "He that speaks much is much mistaken," or "The worst wheel of the cart makes the most noise."—Paul L. Ford in Century.

To Cure a Double Chin.

It has been discovered that a double chin can be cured by correct breathing. The short necked woman must hold her head high, even craning her neck till she is conscious of the tension of the cords. She should also practice relaxing the muscles of the neck and dropping the head and then moving it round in a circle. This will give the head a graceful poise and will exercise the muscles and help to rid them of superfluous fat.—Home Notes.

PLAYED OUT.

Dull headache, pains in various parts of the body, sinking at the pit of the stomach, loss of appetite, feverishness, pimples or sores, are all positive evidence of impure blood. No matter how it became so, it must be purified in order to obtain good health. Acker's Blood Elixir has never failed to cure Scrofulous or Syphilitic poisons, or any other blood diseases. It is certainly a wonderful remedy and we sell every bottle on a positive guarantee. For sale by W L DeLano.

MORE MINES THAN SUMPTER

Lane County and Southern Oregon Coming to the Front.

Interview in Portland Telegram.

"Sumpter," says A. D. Charlton, assistant general passenger agent of the Northern Pacific, "is a wonderful camp. There is no question about that. But while everyone is talking about Sumpter, other mining districts in Oregon should not be forgotten. Keep your eye on Southern Oregon; that district will boom next."

* * * *

In speaking about Southern Oregon Mr. Charlton said the districts around Ashland, Grant's Pass, Bohemia, Blue River, etc., offered just as fine opportunities to capital as Sumpter. Many people, he said, were complaining because they had not located in Sumpter previous to the boom. The same chances, he said, awaited them in Southern Oregon, and in another year they would be upbraiding themselves for having let pass other opportunities.

HIGH-PRICED FLOUR.—Harney News: "Flour is worth $10 a barrel in Burns. This is the highest price ever obtained for that staple in our town. It is really outrageous. Timber Land, Act June 3, 1878—Notice for Publication.

UNITED STATES LAND OFFICE.
ROSEBURG, OREGON,
January 9, 1900.

Notice is hereby given that in compliance with the provisions of the act of congress of June 3, 1878, entitled "An act for the sale of timber lands in the states of California, Oregon, Nevada, and Washington Territory," Fred B. Bellman, of Eugene, county of Lane, state of Oregon, has this day filed in this office his sworn statement No. 751, for the purchase of the N ½ S E ¼, section 26; N ½ S W ¼ of section No. 25, in township No. 17 S, range No. 4 E, and will offer proof to show that the land sought is more valuable for its timber or stone than for agricultural purposes, and to establish his claim to said land before the Register and Receiver of this office at Roseburg, Oregon, on Friday, the 23d day of March, 1900.

He names as witnesses: W. T. Campbell, of Eugene; Sidney Scott, of Eugene; H. W. Rowland, of Eugene; L. E. Bean, of Eugene.

Any and all persons claiming adversely the above-described lands are requested to file their claims in this office on or before the said 23d day of March, 1900.

J. T. BRIDGES, Register.

A Mother's Plain Words

"I suppose you will be astonished when I tell you that six years ago I was in a most dangerous condition with bronchitis and lung trouble, because you can see how well and strong I am now. The attack at that time caused terrible pain in my chest and lungs. I could hardly move, and to stoop caused intense suffering. Someone advised Acker's English Remedy, and I thought I would try it, although I confess that down in my heart I had little faith in it. The first bottle gave great relief, and the second bottle made me the healthy woman I am today. My husband's lungs are weak also, and he cured himself with the same grand old remedy. Our boy and girl have both been saved by it from death by croup. I know this is so, for when they were attacked in the night I had a bottle in the closet, and by acting quickly that fatal malady was easily overcome. We always give it to the children when they have a cough or cold, and we would not be without it for anything. My sister will tell you also, if you ask her, that it is a medicine that can always be depended upon for all the troubles of the breathing organs. I tell all our neighbors about Acker's English Remedy whenever I get a chance, and there are plenty of people around Mechanicsville, N. Y., where I live, who would no more think of going to bed at night without a bottle of it in the house than they would of leaving their doors wide open. As I look at it, parents are criminally responsible when they allow their children to die under their very eyes with croup, because here is a certain remedy that will conquer the terrible monster every time."

(Signed) MRS. FLOYD FOWLER.
