THE ONE SURE THING.

There are sounds of laughter and singing
And sounds that of woe make part,
As the earth to its fate goes swinging,
But love is lord of the heart,
And cloudy or fair the weather
Some souls will be drifting together
And souls be drifting apart.

Dark evil may lurk in the byways,
Still blinking in wrath at the dawn,
And the terror leap forth on the highways
Of the sword from its scabbard withdrawn,
But cloudy or fair the weather
Some souls will be drifting together
And souls be drifting apart.

Though unmoved by the poet's dreaming,
Men tarry too long in the mart
And grow cold in the pride of their scheming,
Yet love is lord of the heart,
And cloudy or fair the weather
Some souls will be drifting together
And some be drifting apart.

—W. T. Talbott in Washington Star.

A COTTON PLANT.

The Story of One Shown on the New York Exchange.

There is a story still told to visitors to the New York Cotton Exchange which always amuses its tellers quite as much as its hearers. It concerns a very superb specimen of the cotton plant which was brought into the exchange one October morning years ago and placed in the center of the pit around which gather every day the men who buy and sell millions of bales of the white staple every month.

There had been bad weather in Texas that season, with reports of irreparable damage to the crop, but this superb plant, laden with bolls throughout its six feet of height and coming, as it did, from Waco, in the most important cotton section of the Lone Star State, was exhibited as conclusive proof that the stories of a ruined crop were certainly false. All New York's big cotton operators came to look at it and to admire it, and most of them remained to sell a few thousand bales.

"If that is what Waco can produce," they said, "the Texas crop alone will be big enough to put cotton down a cent or two per pound."

Late in the day, however, there strolled into the exchange a shrewd old farmer from one of the cotton states east of the Mississippi. He had heard of six foot cotton plants from Texas, and he wanted to see one. A single look at this specimen was sufficient.

"Humbug," he said. "That plant is made of wax, and it grew in South Fifth avenue."

And so it proved. The hoax had demonstrated what its authors asserted, that very few people in New York, even among cotton brokers, would know a cotton plant if they saw one.—New York Mail and Express.

How the Oak Will Grow.

There are trees which would seem to substantiate the theory of some scientists that there is no reason why a tree should ever die unless destroyed by unfavorable conditions or accident.

The oak, for example, will live as a sapling for ages until given opportunity for growth. There is an old saying to the effect that if a pine forest is cut down an oak forest will grow, and this is said to be literally true. Many of the acorns carried into the pine woods by birds and squirrels are left to sprout in the ground. As the tiny saplings grow browsing natives of the forest shades nibble off their tender leaves. Again and again new leaves are put forth, only to serve as food for hungry deer or moose or other marauding creatures. And so, hidden from sunlight, deprived, as it would appear, of every essential of life, the little plants live on, and when at last the pines are felled and the sunlight reaches them they begin their era of growth.

Spurgeon Finds a Text.

Near where Spurgeon's tabernacle stands half a dozen main streets all meet at one point. There is a drinking fountain there, which has stood there for many years. It was one very hot summer's evening, and the drinking fountain was in strong demand. I wanted a drink myself, and in a happy sort of way while waiting my turn I said to some of the people standing by: "Hurry up. I'm parched." Somebody patted me on the back and said: "Thank you, my man. You have given me my text for tonight." It was Mr. Spurgeon's text.

The guard added that he was on his way to the tabernacle at the time, and Spurgeon preached one of the finest sermons he had ever heard on the words: "Hurry up. I'm parched."—Home Magazine.

The Ugliest Beast.

Probably the ugliest beast in the world is a monkey, a grewsome looking animal called the bearded saki. This is so utterly grotesque a beast that it would scarcely be safe to let a child or nervous person see it. The ugliness is not of an amusing kind, but of an evil, sinister nature. The beast has a sort of beard and a countenance unlike anything else in shape and lines. The monkey itself is not particularly savage, but is so hideous that the natives of its country, South America, say that no beast of prey, however hungry, will tackle it. Even a hungry jaguar will starve in a cageful of sakis.

A Unique Notice.

The following is a copy of a unique notice affixed to the church door at Whitechurch, London: "Missing, last Sunday, some families from church. Stolen, several hours from the Lord's day, by a number of people of different ages, dressed in their Sunday clothes."

Travelers by rail in Brittany often glide past Guingamp without remembering that it was here that was produced that useful fabric gingham.

The soil of Egypt at the present day is tilled by exactly the same kind of plow that was used 5,000 years ago.

PLAYED OUT.

Dull headache, pains in various parts of the body, sinking at the pit of the stomach, loss of appetite, feverishness, pimples or sores, are all positive evidence of impure blood. No matter how it became so, it must be purified in order to obtain good health. Acker's Blood Elixir has never failed to cure Scrofulous or Syphilitic poisons, or any other blood diseases. It is certainly a wonderful remedy and we sell every bottle on a positive guarantee. For sale by W L DeLano.

A Persian Romance.

A Persian plaque in the South Kensington museum, London, bears by means of clever relief and brilliant color a romantic tale, part legend and part history. Nobody knows the proportion of each.

At all events, it is declared to be an incident in the life of Baharam V of the Sassanian dynasty. Baharam, according to legend and plaque, was a wonderful archer. During one of his hunting expeditions, on which his favorite wife had accompanied him, he shot a sleeping antelope with such precision as to graze the animal's ear. The antelope awoke and, believing himself annoyed by a fly, put his hind hoof to his ear to strike off the fly. A second arrow sent by the royal hand fixed the antelope's hoof to his horn.

The king's wife merely said, "Practice makes perfect," which touched the pride of her royal spouse.

Indeed, as the penalty for her plain speaking, she was sent out into the mountains to perish, but instead found shelter in a village. Here she lodged in an upper room ascended by 20 steps and, having bought a calf, carried it up and down every day. The king, passing by four years later, was amazed at seeing a young woman carrying a cow up a flight of 20 steps. The lady again took occasion to remark, "Practice makes perfect," whereupon she unveiled, was recognized and restored to favor.

An Insult Well Handled.

You can always trust the American woman to take care of herself. The friends of a girl who lives in Eighteenth street are telling these days of an adventure which befell her one afternoon within the fortnight. She was standing, this Eighteenth street girl, at the corner of F and Eleventh streets waiting for a girl friend. A very dapper young man, a stranger doubtless in the town—for most Washingtonians are too well aware of the girl's social eminence to venture on any impertinence to her—stepped up, bowed and said airily:

"Waiting for somebody?"

The girl turned to look at him.

"Guess you've forgotten me," he went on with growing familiarity. "I saw you at a dinner last week."

The girl looked at him steadily for a moment.

"Oh, I remember now," she said. "It was at Colonel Blank's. You are Colonel Blank's butler, of course. No, I don't know of anybody who wants a butler. Have you tried the employment agencies?"

And then, slowly and calmly, she walked away.—Washington Post.

Tallow Candles as Medicine.

In France the peasantry still stick to medicines calculated to turn the average doctor's hair gray with horror.

Wine is an ingredient of every prescription. In fever cases it is always the predominant one. The French peasant's faith in fermented grape juice is truly beautiful.

If his children are stricken with the measles, he gives them wine well sweetened with honey and highly spiced with pepper. For a severe cold he administers a quart of red wine and a melted tallow candle mixed. For scarlet or brain fever he gives eggs, white wine and soot well beaten together.

Not all their superstitions are curious. Some are pathetic. A mother, for instance, often buries her dead child with its favorite toy or a lock of her own hair in the coffin, "that it may not feel quite alone."

The Wrong Day.

The heartless landlord has come to evict the widow with 18 children, many of whom are teething.

But at the threshold the woman waves him back imperiously.

"Not today!" she cries.

"Why not?" asks the landlord, with pardonable curiosity.

"Because," the woman replied, "no pitiless storm of rain mingled with icy sleet rages without!"

The landlord grinds his teeth in impotent rage. He may trample under foot the promptings of his better nature, but not the conventionalities established by long usage.—Detroit Journal.

Not His Destination.

A steamer was stopped in the mouth of the river owing to a dense sea fog. An old lady inquired of the captain the cause of the delay.

"Can't see up the river," replied the captain.

"But I can see the stars overhead," continued the old lady.

"Yes; but until the boilers bust we ain't a-going that way."—World's Comic.

Happiness.

Human happiness, according to the most received notions, seems to consist of three ingredients, action, pleasure and indolence. And though these ingredients ought to be mixed in different proportions, according to the particular disposition of the person, yet no one ingredient can be entirely wanting without destroying in some measure the relish of the whole composition.

Habit.

Habit hath so vast a prevalence over the human mind that there is scarcely anything too strange or too strong to be asserted of it. The story of the miser who, from being long accustomed to cheat others, came at last to cheat himself and with great delight and triumph picked his own pocket of a guinea to convey to his hoard is not impossible or improbable.

Russian families, when moving to a new home, kindle the fire on the hearth with coal brought from the old residence.

It is strange, but true, that today will be yesterday tomorrow.—Chicago News.

Greatest of All

"Every one in San Antonio, Texas, says that Acker's English Remedy is the greatest thing ever put up for coughs, colds, asthma, bronchitis, croup and consumption. I have been using it over four years for all forms of throat and lung troubles, and have yet to come across a case where it failed. We have four little ones in our family, and neither my wife nor I have ever lost a night's sleep because of throat troubles among the children. I guess that is more than any other family can say. Acker's English Remedy is just as effective for grown-up people as for the young. It seems to go straight to the place where the trouble lies in the throat and bronchial tubes and lungs. It soothes and heals the irritated tissues, loosens up the phlegm and mucus in the breathing passages, quiets the nerves, invigorates the constitution and stops the coughing. My advice to parents is to always keep a bottle in the house. It will be a constant safeguard against croup." (Signed)
