

DAYCARE, continued from Page A1

"We want people to know that this is not a move we made lightly. We realize that shutting down a daycare of any size is an issue and this was a larger one," Woods said.

DHS case workers respond to all complaints within three days of receiving them.

In addition to sanitation concerns, there were repeated violations of staffing rules. Daycare sites are required to have one staff member for every four infants, every five toddlers, every 10 preschoolers and every 15 school age kids. Citing just one example of Iris Valley violations, Woods said representatives of DHS found one staff member in a room with eight infants.

"It's not like we were there under cover of night, our staff lets everyone know when they are there," said Richard Riggs, legal administrator for the ODE early learning division. "It becomes a situation where if this is happening while we are there, what is happening when we aren't?"

Riggs noted that no action is being taken against Williams personally aside from the process to revoke her license. Williams has obtained an attorney and notified DHS of her intention to request a stay on her revocation, Riggs said.

There is no timeline for how long the proceedings might take.

Eclipse chalk festival looks unlikely

By ERIC A. HOWALD
Of the KeizerTimes

The logistics of a chalk festival to coincide with the Keizer eclipse event might get in the way of the Keizer Public Art Commission pulling it off.

The idea received its most in-depth discussion to date at a meeting of the KPAC Tuesday, March 21.

Members of the commission floated the idea of a public art event in coordination with the eclipse festival as a fundraiser. Initial plans called for cordoning off a space within Keizer Rapids Park during the eclipse festival and inviting artists in to create sidewalk art within it.

However, discussions at the March meeting dug further into the possible problems in finding a suitable space, ideas for what might work and finding money to put it together. After completing the Keizer mural in September 2016, KPAC only has about $500 for the rest of the fiscal year.

One of the ideas was getting glow-in-the-dark chalk for artists to use that would glow when the eclipse passes over Keizer on August 21. Commission chair Beth Melendy said she was only able to find one brand of glow-in-the-dark chalk and it received terrible reviews online for a spendy item.

"We also don't know if it will come off easily once the festival is over," Melendy said.

There was brief discussion of making the chalk using glow-in-the-dark paint and plaster, but that was also a costly proposition.

Community Development Director Nate Brown said the finding space in a park that will be overtaken by campers and concert traffic was also a troubling proposition.

"I really am concerned about the crowds and we won't have the ability to rope off the area," Brown said.

One of the commission's newest members Maritza Gonzales, said that even if the festival wasn't something that could be pulled off in time for the eclipse, it was still something she wanted to pursue.

"I still want to do it, and there are awesome artists doing the work out there," Gonzalez said.

The 2018 Iris Festival was mentioned as one possibility.

In other business:

• Commissioners approved artwork from collective known as High Fiber Diet that will be on display in the Keizer Civic Center in June and July. The display, titled It's Not Easy Being Green, will feature mixed media art with an emphasis on recycled, repurposed and organic material.

• Artwork from the Salem-Keizer Education Foundation, produced by K-12 students and curated by teachers is on display through the end of May.

R&R Tree Service assisted the city with cutting up the massive trees.

"We responded to 14 other locations and had to cut trees off of sidewalks and streets in nine locations," Lawyer said.

"In addition to trees we picked up about a dozen street and stop signs from throughout the city that blew down. Temporary stop signs were placed on Friday at the intersections that had stop signs down."

Keizer Public Works employees were dispatched Monday, April 10, to install new posts where signs had blown down.

Nearly a dozen trees were blown over in Keizer parks.

Wallace House Park lost five, Keizer Rapids Parks lost three and Mike Whittam Park lost three. A large limb also fell off a tree near the gazebo in Chalmers Jones Park behind the Keizer Civic Center.

Working outside? Look up!

If you're on the job outdoors this spring, watch for power lines and stay at least 10 feet away. Call PGE at 800-542-8818 if power lines are in the way of your work.
