A MATRIMONIAL PACK.

We were married—she and I,
In the spring.
Said she, as we settled down
In our cottage in the town,
"Love, we now begin life's reign,
And of this our small domain
You are king."

And a happier man than I
Ne'er was seen,
And the future seemed to be
Ever full of bliss for me
As I told my fairy wife,
"Of my fortune and my life
You are queen."

Then her mother in our home
Took her place,
And this life became to me
Full of woes and misery.
Though I dared not raise a fuss,
From the day she came to us
She was ace.

AN EDITOR'S STORY.

"It was in a western city some years ago," remarked the city editor, "that I was holding down the city desk on a daily for the first time. We had a man on the paper who was simply a crank on homicide, and he was more than a mere reporter, for he had detective talent of the highest order. He didn't care much for the common crimes—burglaries, larcenies and such—but give him a good, mysterious murder, and he was splendid. Not only did he have the history of all the famous murders at his fingers' ends, but he delighted in ferreting out the most mysterious crimes that came within our province. In every case, except the one I am telling about—and there were a good many killings in that town—he traced out the murderer before the detectives even dreamed of his identity.

"I have since thought the secret of his success was that he put himself mentally in the place of the murderer and reasoned it out from motives rather than from the 'clews' of the ordinary detective.

"'There is seldom much method in murder,' he once said to me when in a rarely communicative mood. 'Most men would commit it in about the same way under the same circumstances. It is only when a murderer goes about it systematically, as do the thugs of India, that a murder becomes truly mysterious.'

"I once asked him why he did not become a regular detective.

"'I was born and bred a newspaper man,' he said, 'and habit is too strong to break.' That was literally true in his case. Otherwise I might not have to tell this story.

"One morning the body of a fine looking man was found in an alley adjoining the electric light works in the very heart of the city. The afternoon papers had a chance at it, but didn't make much out of it, so I at once assigned it to Jones, as we will call him. Although he did not show up at the usual hour, I had no doubt that he was already at work on it, as it was as mysterious a case as even he could desire.

"The victim was identified as a traveling man who had just arrived, and, as far as known, he had no friends or acquaintances in the city. It was not a case of robbery, for all his money and valuables were left on the body. There was a slight contusion on the back of the head and a small needlelike hole directly through the man's heart. It was especially strange that such a crime could have been committed in a public thoroughfare, while there was absolutely no clew to the murderer or his motive.

"But these difficulties were only such as would ordinarily put Jones on his mettle, so I did not doubt that he would have a good account of the affair. I was therefore somewhat surprised when he came sneaking in about 6 o'clock in the evening to see what his assignment was. He looked worn and haggard, but denied that he was ill, so I gave him the murder assignment. I thought I saw a startled look in his eyes, but he maintained his outward composure and went out without a word.

"I did not see him again that evening. About midnight I began to wonder why I had not heard from him, but only speculated on the possibility of something having happened to him, for the idea that he could possibly fail never occurred to me. Finally, after an hour had gone by, I telephoned to the police station. Word came back that there were no new developments in the case, and that Jones had not been there. Sending two men out to hunt him up, I set to work myself to make up a story of the murder from the afternoon papers. Just then Jones came in. His step was unsteady and his face flushed. He had evidently been drinking heavily—something I never knew him to do before—but he was not drunk, rather he seemed at high nervous tension, although outwardly as calm as ever.

"I decided to let this breach of discipline pass and merely asked him for his murder story. He replied that he hadn't written it.

"'Well, get to work on it at once,' I said rather sharply.

"Then he really surprised me by saying that he had nothing to write beyond the bare facts already known. The police had developed nothing new, and he supposed that I had worked up the story from the evening papers.

"'And has it come to pass that you wait for the police to develop a murder case for you?' I exclaimed angrily. 'As for the reports in the evening papers, you can fake a better story than they had!'

"He sat down, in apparent despair, at his desk. Then I relented and cajoled him a little, begging him not to spoil his great record by falling down on such an assignment. 'There's a starter for you,' said I, throwing him the article I had commenced. 'Now, go ahead and fill that out with a column description of the scene.'

"'I haven't even visited it,' he replied. Nevertheless he picked up the pages and read them as if impelled by some hateful fascination. Then he took up his pen to make a few minor corrections. Then, as if totally oblivious of my presence, he began to write.

"As sheet after sheet fell under his fingers I snatched them up, read them hurriedly and shot them down the 'copy tube' to the composing room. I read rapidly, as an editor will, taking but small account of the matter so long as it ran smoothly, while I had too much confidence in him to question the accuracy of his statements. I only realized that he was writing a great story, the greatest he had ever done. He seemed inspired with the very innermost thoughts of the murderer, and under his touch every trivial incident came out with distinctness and coherency that made the cause and method of the crime perfectly plain.

"First he described the scene with accuracy of detail that would have been impossible for one who had not studied it closely. The selection of the spot he explained by the fact that the bright electric light, streaming through the windows of the power house, made it impossible for the passerby to see into the shadows. Thus while impenetrable darkness screened the assassin ample light guided his blow, and, moreover, the rattle and roar of the machinery near by drowned all sound of the struggle or the falling body.

"The blow on the head, he demonstrated, must have been from a sandbag, while the wound through the heart could only have been made by one of those long, fine bladed stilettos of Italian make. Furthermore, the fact that this peculiar weapon was driven home with a firm hand, after the victim had been stunned by a blow on the head, indicated premeditated and deliberate murder, while the theory of robbery was disproved by the fact that the man's valuables had been untouched. The only tenable theory, therefore, was that the motive of the murder was revenge.

"A more masterly analysis of a case I never read, but here he branched off into what I at first supposed to be purely imaginary speculations as to the wrong which had led the murderer to seek the life of the unknown man. These seemed purposely vague at first, but gathered in strength and certainty until I concluded that he must have some good foundation for them. Starting with hypotheses, he soon began to state them as facts. He described how the dead man, a once trusted friend, had entered the home of another; how, by subtle wiles and deceit, he had stolen the love of the wife. Then followed an elopement and the breaking up of that once happy home.

"He told, with the bitterness of truth, how the scoundrel had deserted the weak and erring woman and left her to perish alone; how the idea of revenge had filled the mind of the wronged husband; how, himself unseen, he had followed every movement of the intended victim for months and carefully plotted his destruction; how he had decoyed the doomed man to the city and to the very spot where the murder was committed, and how he had destroyed the only clews—a couple of letters in the pockets of the dead man—and finally made his own escape, the secret safe in his own heart alone.

"As I read this remarkable tale through the conviction forced itself upon me that this was the absolute truth. If the writer himself had committed the deed, he could not have described it more graphically. Suddenly the thought flashed over me—could he describe such a crime thus without having, in fact, committed it?

"We were alone in the room. I glanced at Jones apprehensively. He was writing rapidly—fiercely. His eyes were fixed, but he seemed to be looking, through and beyond the paper across which his pen flew, at something fascinating—terrible. When he finished, it was with a start, as if waking from a trance. I glanced at the last page, where was final confirmation of my fears.

"'My God, Jones, is this true?' I managed to say.

"'Every word of it, as I live,' he replied firmly, if faintly.

"'Then you have written the warrant for your own arrest,' I said.

"His head dropped on his desk, but he said not a word.

"'Jones,' said I, finally shaking him by the shoulder to arouse him to an understanding of my meaning, 'enough to hang you is already in type. In an hour the papers will be on the street. In another hour the police will be after you. Go—make the most of your start!'

"It was as I predicted," said the city editor after a pause. "Before daylight a detective called on me to ascertain the source of that story. I simply pointed to Jones' name on the assignment book, and they went after him.'

"Did they catch him?" asked the cub reporter eagerly.

"They found him in his room, with a stiletto through his heart," said the city editor.—Willard A. Holcomb in Argonaut.

Cullom and Proctor.

There is a brisk competition between Senator Proctor of Vermont and Senator Cullom of Illinois as to which of the two looks the more like Lincoln. For years the Illinois man has proudly claimed the distinction of most resembling the great martyred president of any one in Washington, and there has been none to dispute. But since Senator Proctor has shaved off his flowing beard there are a new set of Lincoln features in the senate chamber. The Vermont man is taller and thinner than his Illinois rival, and with his smooth face has a very marked Lincoln look, so much so that Cullom is in danger of losing his laurels. A poll of the senate may be necessary before the question is solved.—Washington Correspondent.

A German View of Us.

The Berlin National Zeitung last week published a curious leader on American affairs. The writer's conclusion was that the Anglo-Saxon and German races were losing their determining influence on the Union's affairs. The influx of Catholic Irish and Italians as well as other Latin elements, he thought, would at no very distant date lead to the crisis—feared now by some American politicians — in which the Union would be divided into three republics—one on the Pacific, another on the Atlantic and the third on the gulf of Mexico.

Told Family Secrets.

Bjornson, the famous Norwegian author and politician, recently published a book, "New Stories," which has subjected him to much criticism. One of the stories is entitled "Absalom's Hair" and gives to the public, it is said, the secrets of a family whose name is known to all Norway. The poet has been condemned by many people, but the book is being read by every one.

The Way He Worked It.

A gentleman prominent in the hardware trade in Philadelphia told a funny story last night.

"Some years ago when I started in the hardware business," said he, "a man came into our store and wanted to buy a tailor's goose. As you know, a goose is an iron used by tailors in pressing clothes. I looked the stock over and found we hadn't a goose in the place. I was told to order some and sat down to write to a New York house. First I aid, 'Send us one dozen tailors' geese.' That wouldn't do, and I racked my brains for the right thing to say. I tried 'tailor's gooses, tailor geese' and many other expressions. Finally in desperation I worded my order as follows: 'Send us one tailor's goose and 11 more.' That seemed to cover what I wanted to say, though it was not particularly elegant."—Syracuse Post.

Made a Noise In the World.

"What became of the Hodgkin boys?" asked a New Yorker of a friend upon returning after many years' absence to his old home in the country.

"Waal, Jim's runnin the old farm, and Tom's preachin in the south, and Billy's tendin the postoffice at Waverly."

"There was another," remarked the city man. "Wasn't his name Ed? He went west. Was anything ever heard from him?"

"Heard from him? Yes, I should think so. He's made noise enough in this world. Why, he beats a gong in a railroad eatin station."—New York Herald.

It Worked.

A lady living on Cass avenue heard a knock at the side door and opened it. A tramp stood there who doffed his cap.

"Sweet lady"—he began, when she sternly interrupted him.

"How dare you address me in that manner?"

"I humbly beg pardon," he said. "It was all owing to a habit I have acquired of speaking my thoughts aloud."

He got two kinds of pie and some doughnuts.—Detroit Free Press.

A RETIRED BUSINESS WOMAN.

A Page From Her History.

The important experiences of others are interesting. The following is no exception: "I had been troubled with heart disease 25 years, much of that time very seriously. For five years I was treated by one physician continuously. I was in business, but obliged to retire on account of my health. A physician told my friends that I could not live a month. My feet and limbs were badly swollen, and I was indeed in a serious condition when a gentleman directed my attention to Dr. Miles' New Heart Cure, and said that his sister, who had been afflicted with heart disease, had been cured by the remedy, and was again a strong, healthy woman. I purchased a bottle of the Heart Cure, and in less than an hour after taking the first dose I could feel a decided improvement in the circulation of my blood. When I had taken three doses I could move my ankles, something I had not done for months, and my limbs had been swollen so long that they seemed almost putrified. Before I had taken one bottle of the New Heart Cure the swelling had all gone down, and I was so much better that I did my own work. On my recommendation six others are taking this valuable remedy."—Mrs. Morgan, 989 W. Harrison St., Chicago, Ill.

Dr. Miles' New Heart Cure, a discovery of an eminent specialist in heart disease, is sold by all druggists on a positive guarantee, or sent by the Dr. Miles Medical Co., Elkhart, Ind., on receipt of price, $1 per bottle, six bottles for $5, express prepaid.
