Among the many dances for which Wasco is noted, probably none in the past two years was so well attended and so thoroughly enjoyed as the one given last Friday evening. It was more than a success. Nearly all the young people in town were there, and our neighboring towns furnished a goodly number; at any rate, the Booth hall was filled to overflowing, and for some nnaccountable reason everybody—boys and girls alike, seemed crazy with delight. We have seen a few dances in this city, but never have we seen the folks enjoy themselves as they did that evening. And it did our heart good to watch their happy faces.

Tuesday night some miscreant broke the glass out of the back window of Marsh & Medler's drug store and entered for the purpose of robbery. The safe, being locked, was not molested; but the till was broken open. Mr. Marsh says the till contained not more than 15 or 20 cents, and he has not missed any goods. It is presumed the burglars hoped to find the safe open.

Tuesday afternoon Mr. Workman's little boy, Leonard, came near getting drowned. He was playing alongside the road, when he accidentally slipped into the water on one side. Mrs. Kennedy, who lives near by, happened to see him fall, and ran to his assistance. He had gone down the third time.

To the Farmers of Eastern Oregon.

Your attention for one moment.

Did you ever consider the idea of raising flax in your section of country?

Do you know that the soil and climate of Eastern Oregon are especially adapted to the culture of flax?

Flax matures in from 65 to 90 days.

Squirrels do not bother flax.

This is a profitable crop to raise.

For further information about flax you should call on Mr. W. R. Laughrize while he is in Wasco. He can give you many facts that will interest you, and will furnish you seed to plant twenty acres or more.

Advantageous Flax Culture.

E. E. Larimore, manager of the Portland Linseed Oil company, recently made a trip in the interests of his company through Morrow, Sherman, Gilliam and Klickitat counties He also visited Eastern Washington and the Nez Perce Indian reservation in Idaho.

In speaking of the present status of the flax industry in this section and the prospects for the future, Mr. Larimore said:

"There are now between 5000 and 6000 acres planted to flax in Morrow, Sherman, Gilliam and Klickitat counties. Last year was the first year that flax had been planted in these counties, and it was through the efforts of the Portland Linseed Oil company, who furnished seed to farmers, that this crop was planted. In Eastern Washington there were probably 3000 to 4000 acres in flax last year. This makes approximately about 30,000 acres planted to flax in the country contiguous to Portland When it is stated that the Portland Linseed Oil company, with its present capacity, could handle yearly the product of 60,000 acres, it is shown conclusively that there is a great future for the farmer in this one crop alone."

In the matter of soil and climate, Mr. Larimore gives it as his opinion that Eastern Oregon is the best region on the coast for the successful culture of flax. The seed may be sown on summer fallow land, and as early as April 1st, because the farmers of Eastern Oregon are not bothered by late spring rains The flax is quick in maturing, and being sown so early can be harvested before the hot winds strike it

The crop can thus be got out of the way before other crops demand the attention of the farmer The average yield on the coast per acre is 19 bushels, and in the Eastern flaxgrowing states only from 10 to 15 bushels per acre.

Mr. Larimore gives figures to show that flax will net the farmer more profit than wheat, and says taking the average, 19 bushels of flax at $1 per bushel, wheat at present prices would have to average 42 bushels per acre to equal the flax proposition. Mr. Larimore believes there is no question but there is more money in flax than in any other crop on the coast.

The Portland Linseed Oil company has guaranteed a price of $1 per bushel delivered in Portland for all the flax the farmers of the coast can grow this year, and the prospects are good for running their mill all next season.

Mr. Larimore reports business in general very good in the country he has just visited.

Highest Cross in America.

The Two Republics (Mexico) notes the erection on the summit of Mount Orizaba, or, as the Mexicans call it, Citlaltepetl (Star Mountain), of an iron cross seven yards high in place of the wooden one erected there a long time ago. The Two Republics asserts that this cross is the highest one in America. It has been supposed, it says, that the volcano Mistes, in Guatemala, was higher than Orizaba, but recent measurements make it appear that the latter mountain is the highest one north of the isthmus of Panama, and it is the highest one on the western continent on which a cross has been erected. Probably it is the highest one in the world.

Taking Oath in Hindoostan.

The Hindoos have a curious way of emphasizing what they say. In most villages is a sacred tree, a pipal tree, and the gods are supposed to delight to sit among its leaves and listen to the music of their rustling. The deponent takes one of these leaves in his hands and invokes the gods who sit about him to crush him and those dear to him as he crushes the leaf in his hand if he speaks anything but the truth. He then plucks and crushes the leaf and states what he has to say.

His Life Was Saved.

Mr J. E. Lilly, a prominent citizen of Hannibal, Mo., lately had a wonderful deliverance from a frightful death In telling of it he says: "I was taken with typhoid fever, that ran into pneumonia. My lungs became hardened. I was so weak I couldn't even sit up in bed. Nothing helped me. I expected to soon die of consumption, when I heard of Dr King's New Discovery One bottle gave great relief. I continued to use it, and now am well and now am well and strong. I can't say too much in its praise." This marvelous medicine is the surest and quickest cure in the world for all throat and lung trouble. Regular sizes 50 cents and $1.00. Trial bottles free at Marsh & Medler's drug store; every bottle guaranteed.

You Try It.

JOHN W. GOLDEN

EASY-GOING KING HUMBERT.

His One Conspicuous Weakness a Fondness for Military Display.

King Humbert has the reputation of being the most constitutional of all the constitutional monarchs of Europe. So well has he fulfilled this rule that, according to the Baltimore Sun, he may be said to have, save in one point only, completely extinguished his personality. That point is his determination, at all costs, to keep up the army and navy to their present state of efficiency and numbers. The various ministries that have succeeded each other in Italy with such rapidity have really governed the state. This one condition they had to accept—the maintenance of the army as desired by the king. His usual costume on gala days and and when he shows himself to his subjects is the military costume. He is the first soldier in Italy. That he possesses great courage has been made fully evident by his devotion when, the cholera having broken out with virulence in Naples, he visited the sick and dying day after day in their low and unhealthy dwellings. What he may be as a legislator, a thinker, or a wit, the public is not informed. No legislative measures of paramount benefit or importance are attributed to his initiative; no striking thought that might enter the heart of the nation has been pronounced by him or has reached the people; even the faculty of making a witty phrase, which, though little in itself, being uttered by one in high place acquires a value and a currency which carries it far and renders popular its originator, is not a quality which he possesses. A generous, good-natured, easy-going gentleman, who desires to live and let live—in fact, a person of rather neutral characteristics—is the picture that people make to themselves of King Humbert. He is to the fore when a review is held. He looks well when, arrayed in grand military costume and riding a noble steed and surrounded by the exceptionally brilliant staff of the Italian army, he reviews the troops in their march past him. Again, when seated in one of the gala carriages, accompanied by the tall, steel-clad royal guards, he goes to open a new session of parliament he is a figure well worth noticing. So deeply has the military spirit entered into the nation that the king is never publicly seen on state occasions in any other than a military costume.

COURIERS BACK NUMBERS.

No Longer Any Need to Go Through Europe with Them.

Up to times within the memory of living men, almost no one of means traveled through Europe without a courier. Before railroads were built and before good guide books were printed, he was almost indispensable. His tribe survives, writes Herbert Lace in Going Abroad, but in greatly diminished numbers. To the self-reliant traveler he is of no use whatever. Indeed, he is frequently a positive incumbrance, and worse. To my mind, one of the great pleasures of travel is in learning to travel by myself. There is satisfaction, pleasure and education in planning routes, deciphering time tables, making bargains, learning by observation the lay of the land.

The time may have been when a courier could save a traveler more than his cost. Most certainly that is not the case now. On the contrary, as he gets a percentage on every purchase his party makes (which, of course, comes out of the purchaser in increased price), and as it is often for his interest to advise the more costly route, the more costly hotel, or the more costly excursion, he eats up much more than his wages, while saving positively nothing. Bean declares that in a two weeks' trip in southern Spain, which he made side by side with a couple having a courier, he invariably reached the hotel first, got better rooms, saw all the sights to as good advantage; yet the courier was of his kind an expert. The fact is that travel has become so general, tourist companies, railroads and landlords have so well studied its needs, books are so plentiful, that you couldn't very well get off the track or have a mishap if you tried.

OLD ROMAN PERQUISITES.

Immense Amounts Gobbled by Officeholders in the Days of Cicero.

When L. Capernius Piso was appointed governor of Macedonia for one year he drew for his outfit from the public treasury 18,000,000 sesterces, or £150,000. He did not want the money for that purpose. Everything required by a proconsul was supplied to him by the province. Piso simply took the money for himself and lent it out in Rome at high interest. C. Verres was charged by Cicero with having robbed Sicily of £350,000 in three years, besides many valuable works of art. He practically admitted his guilt by retiring from Rome without attempting any defense. Cicero, when governor of the poor province of Cilicia, found himself the richer in one year by £20,000, and he was perhaps the only proconsul who ever handed over his surplus to the state.

There can be no doubt that Cicero and the younger Pliny received large sums from their clients while these clients were still living. Balbus is not likely to have secured the argument "Pro Balbo" for a mere trifle, and the gratitude of Sicily for the prosecution of Verres undoubtedly took a very substantial form. Apart from all such honoraria, it is recorded that Cicero and the younger Pliny received legacies from clients to the amount of £170,000. Gibbon tells us, on the authority of Olympiodorus, that several of the richest senators had an income of £160,000 a year—without computing the stated provision of corn and wine.
