A Southern planter went to New Orleans several months after General Butler had taken the reins in his hands and acquired a reputation for "tyranny." One of the first things he saw was the placards of a gent's furnishing store posted on the walls and walls and fences: "Get your shirts at Moody's."

The planter saw it again and again, and mused deeply upon it. "It's another of Butler's orders," he said to himself. "He's probably a partner in the concern, and what he says 'goes;' so I suppose it's best to submit. I don't need any shirts, and it's a shame to be compelled to buy 'em now; but I don't want any more trouble." He accordingly went to Moody's and bought half a dozen shirts.—Ex.

The Home Merchant.

An exchange very truthfully says: Stand by your home merchant. He is the man who helps to pay for the streets on which you walk, for the schools in which your children, or perhaps you were educated; helps to keep up the church in which you worship, he is the man who built a home which enhances the value of your home property. Every subscription paper that is passed has his name on it. He is the man who cannot afford to swindle you; self interest, if nothing else, prevents it. He bears his share of the city government; stays right by you in sunshine and in darkness; in days of prosperity and adversity. These are but a few reasons why your patronage should be given to the home merchant.
