WEIGHING THE MILK

IMPORTANCE OF THIS MATTER TO THE DAIRYMAN.

What Careful Selection and Breeding Have Done For the Denmark Dairy Farmers—Better Fat and Milk Yield—Pedigree Matings.

Mr. John Speir of the department of agriculture for Ireland in a recent address on the subject, "The Feeding and Management of Milk Cows," delivered in County Donegal, said:

If milk cows of a good type are selected and properly treated, they will give a good return, but if they are not properly kept the result will be disappointing. Farmers cannot be too particular in the selection of cows for the production of milk, particularly when the milk is to be manufactured into butter, and it is much more profitable to pay a full price for a good milking cow than have an indifferent one for nothing. If heifer calves intended for milking purposes were kept only from the best milking cows, four gallons of milk might be produced at the cost of every three now yielded by most herds. In that respect a valuable lesson was learned from their keenest competitors, the Danes, who 25 years ago were not dairy farmers at all, but grain producers and stock feeders. Subsequently they were advised by their experts to weigh the milk of every cow night and morning and to keep record of it and to keep heifer calves only from what were known to be their heaviest milking cows. This expert advice was right and prevailed, though some thought it unnecessary, and at the present time there are few Danish farmers who could not give the annual yield in their herds for several generations back. The result of it all was that probably no cows in any country had such a high average yield as those in Denmark.

As an example of what had been done by selection and breeding the late Mr. E. G. Tisdall told him that when he was purchasing the best heifers he could get their average yield was 420 gallons per annum for the first ten years of his experience. Heifer calves were kept from the best of these, and in a short time the average of the heifers was 600 gallons in the year and in 1893, the end of the third period averaged 800 gallons in one year. Mr. Tisdall also told him that the system of feeding was practically the same all the time.

The selection of the sire to mate with the cows kept was also a point of first importance. This was specially so because of the fact that the bull would regulate not the milk of one cow only, but would influence for good or bad that of every animal bred from him. It was therefore most important that every stock bull kept for service in a dairy herd should be out of the very best milking cow procurable.

Their attention should also be directed to keeping cows only whose milk contained a high percentage of butter fat. They should not delude themselves with the idea that if they had cows giving plenty of milk all that they required to do to get plenty of butter fat was to feed them well. By all means feed them well; but they might rest assured that no amount of feeding would raise the percentage of fat in the milk of a cow which was naturally low to equal the milk of a cow whose produce was naturally rich. Two cows could quite easily produce the same quantity of milk in the year, yet when that milk was turned into butter the one cow might have produced 100 pounds more butter than the other. That was not all, for the cow which had the 100 extra pounds of butter had not probably cost any more to keep than the other. When the cow came to within a fortnight of calving, she should be brought into the house and kept there till she calved. This was particularly necessary if food was abundant, and especially so after midsummer and during early autumn.

After being brought into the house the cow should receive two or three mashes of bran and treacle daily, with a little hay and what water she cared to drink. After the cow calved she should not be milked completely dry for several days. A little milk could be taken away as often as one liked, but only just a little to relieve the udder. Until a week after calving the udder should never be completely emptied. The object of this was to prevent milk fever. In winter when in calf cows should be put out every day for a little exercise, fresh air and what green food could be picked up on the pastures. If any grass was to be had, plenty of good hay was all that was required. If no grass was available, a few turnips, potatoes or cabbages served to keep the bowels in good order.

As to the relative merits of crushed or ground and whole grain Mr. Speir said that if grains were merely crushed they would be found to give as good feeding results as if finer and that at the same time they would not run into dough, in which condition they were sometimes dangerous. Tests made at various times had shown that when grain was thoroughly soaked in water before being used it gave best results.

"Something New Under The Sun"

All Doctors have tried to cure CATARRH by the use of powders, acid gases, inhalers and drugs in paste form. Their powders dry up the mucous membranes causing them to crack open and bleed. The powerful acids used in the inhalers have entirely eaten away the same membranes that their makers have aimed to cure, while pastes and ointments cannot reach the disease. An old and experienced practitioner who has for many years made a close study and specialty of the treatment of CATARRH, has at last perfected a Treatment which when faithfully used, not only relieves at once, but permanently cures CATARRH, by removing the cause, stopping the discharges, and curing all inflammation. It is the only remedy known to science that actually reaches the affected parts.
