MINIATURE LANDSCAPES.

How Hills, Valleys and Ponds Are Represented in Paper Models.

"Building up the country" is an undertaking which may be approached in many ways, but perhaps few people know that the phrase can be literally applied to the work that is constantly being done in miniature by topographical engineers. The process, which is remarkable for its simplicity, is well illustrated by a series of models in the civil engineering department of the Massachusetts Institute of Technology in Boston, where the "building up" of certain sections of the country has become an everyday matter.

A piece of country is selected, for example, which includes a pond, a valley and a range of hills. The engineer makes a map of the selected region, starting with the line of the shore of the pond, which naturally gives him his lowest level. Another line, which skirts the valley and perhaps surrounds a hill, represents a level somewhat above that of the surface of the pond. At succeeding levels other lines are drawn, each following the configuration of the country at a definite altitude, until the hilltops are finally shown within a series of encircling irregular lines.

To make his profile model from these data the engineer starts with a sheet of cardboard the size of the map. This is supposed to represent the level of the water in the pond. Another piece of cardboard has a hole cut in it to represent the pond itself and is pasted to the first piece. A third piece of cardboard is cut to conform to the lines of the next level and pasted upon the second, and this process is repeated for each counter line until step by step the hills are built up. The result is a rough model of the whole region to be illustrated, the successive altitudes being shown by regular steps, each as high as the thickness of the cardboard. Then, with plaster of paris or putty, the angles between the successive layers of cardboard are filled in, and the result is a miniature reproduction of the pond, valley and hills.

From this finished model a plaster of paris cast can be obtained which will serve as a mold from which to make as many paper mache reproductions of the original as may be desired. In the classroom, indeed, an instructor often passes out to his students a number of such models, very much as jelly molds might be displayed to a class in fancy cooking.

The Preparation of Radium.

The new metals, polonium, radium and actinium, are likely to be heard of often in the next few years on account of their marvelous powers of radiating electrified particles. As matters stand at present they appear to have infinite power in this respect, radiating energy ceaselessly without loss. These metals are contained in the ores of uranium, vanadium and thorium, in pitchblende and in chalcolite, carnotite and autunite. M. and Mme. Curie have separated these metals by complex and costly processes that need not be here described. Less than two grains of radium result from every ton of mineral. The radiating power of this metal is one ten millionth of a watt, and the displacement of the metal is one milligram in 1,000,000,000 years. When the dust of this metal is present in the laboratory, all the apparatus present is electrified, rendered radio active, in spite of ordinary insulation.

Three Daring Boys Towed by a Shark

Among the "Queer Results" of which C. B. Holder, tells in St. Nicholas, perhaps the queerest is a "nurse" shark captured at sea and impounded in a tide water aquarium in Florida.

With no little difficulty, says Mr. Holder, we captured the nurse, towed it to the aquarium, which was an inclosed moat half a mile long, 50 feet wide and from 6 to 8 feet deep. It required a dozen or more men to haul the fish, which was 11 feet in length, over the little tide gate. Just before it was released a rope bridle was passed over it—a loop that fitted over the head and was tightened just behind the fins so that it remained in place, a perfect saddle cloth. To this a rope about ten feet long was attached and in turn made fast to a float. All this was prepared in advance, and it did not require much time to attach it, though the plunges of the shark knocked several men from their feet. Finally all was ready, and the shark was rolled over into the moat, where it went dashing away, the telltale float following at the surface.

For some time we had been building a boat which was to be the carriage of this steed, and a ride behind the shark was looked forward to with great delight. Finally the day arrived, and we launched our boat and paddled out in search of our steed.

Presently we saw the float lying motionless on the water near the wall. One of my companions paddled gently, and the flat bottomed boat slowly drifted on. Leaning forward, I picked up the float and quickly ran the painter through a hole that had been left in the float for the purpose and fastened it with a bowline knot. When this was done, I hauled in the slack and gently pulled the rein, while one of the boys "clucked" at the shark and the other said "Gedap!" No response. Then I gave another jerk at the line, and the shark woke up.

The shark, now feeling the rope, dashed along at a rapid pace, making it extremely difficult for us to retain our places, but my companions aided me. Carefully raising me, they righted the box. I secured the painter and held the single rein in triumph. It was a signal success. We had left behind the shark and were moving at a rate that was wildly exciting. The speed was so great that the boat was pulled almost bow under, and a wave of foam preceded us.

VILLAGE IMPROVEMENT.

What a Woman's Society Has Accomplished in a New York Town.

In a town in central New York the ladies' Village Improvement society has purchased opera chairs for the village theater and a street sprinkler. Five of the women have been designated the "firemen's relief," and they make coffee and provide refreshments for the firemen at fires. The society has exercised its influence against the prevalent habit of the male population of expectorating tobacco juice on the sidewalks and has had a gratifying message of success. It also brought about the enactment of a village ordinance which provides for the arrest of tramps if found within the limits of the village, and notices to this effect are posted along the highways near the town and on the trees in town.

The society fosters town pride and public spirit, and through its untiring efforts the village stands out as a model to be followed. Since its organization the society has completely changed the aspect of the town, and where neglect and carelessness were formerly the rule neatness and tidiness now prevail. Fences and sidewalks are kept in repair, lawns laid out, the streets cleared of rubbish, and flowers and shrubbery have taken the place of weeds. The women's influence has extended to the neighboring farmers, who, patterning after what they have seen in the village, shave their lawns and make their cottages and fences heeter. The society, it should be added, religiously abstains from politics.

Drying preparations simply develop dry catarrh; they dry up the secretions, which adhere to the membrane and decompose, causing a far more serious trouble than the ordinary form of catarrh. Avoid all drying inhalants, fumes, smokes and snuffs and use that which cleanses, soothes and heals. Ely's Cream Balm is such a remedy and will cure catarrh or cold in the head easily and pleasantly. A trial size will be mailed for 10 cents. All druggists sell the 50c. size, Ely Brothers, 56 Warren St., N. Y.

MAKING A NEW TOWN.

What a Great Industry Has Done In Pennsylvania.

The town of South Sharon is a creation of the Sharon Steel company. The originators of the company about two years ago purchased over 1,000 acres south of Sharon, and after selecting sites for the furnaces and mills laid out the remainder of the land in lot plans. The lots have been disposed of with phenomenal rapidity.

The steel company has under course of erection 350 dwellings, to be either sold or rented, as tenants may prefer. There are also over 150 other houses going up in the town. When all the mills are running, many more homes will be erected to accommodate workmen, to say nothing of other inhabitants of the place.

The main streets have been paved and sewered, and tracks for an electric car line between the town and Sharon have been completed. It is likely that the town will be incorporated as a borough and called Buhl City, in honor of the first president of the steel company.

The new town is now in the midst of a building boom. The finest building thus far erected is the four story brick office structure of the company on a terrace 20 feet above Broadway, the main street. The next building of prominence is the Broadway hotel. In the business section stores are being built, another hotel is soon to go up, and in the residence districts many handsome homes are being erected.
