Worked by the Tides

A water-mill that is nine miles inland, yet obtains all its power from the tides, is claimed to be the only one of its kind by the inhabitants of Woodbridge, Suffolk, formerly one of England's great shipbuilding centers. Just how long this wheel has been answering to the rhythm of the tides no one is certain, but about 740 years ago a mill, standing on the same spot, was leased for a yearly rental of a pound of cummin, valued in those days at about twopence. When the tides of the River Deben are at their highest and lowest the little mill rests, but at any other time the great wheel is turning.
