"IT IS SWEET, BUT DON'T YOU HAVE SOMETHING A LITTLE OLDER? AFTER ALL, SHE IS NEARLY SIXTEEN AND A HALF."

JUST JESTING

Hardly at All

After being badgered and tongue-lashed by the plaintiff's lawyer for a good fifty minutes, the man on the witness stand, who was defending himself against charges of assault and battery, still insisted that he did no more than push the plaintiff.

"I want to know just how hard you pushed him," demanded the lawyer. "Will you please step down and demonstrate on me the sort of push you gave my client?"

The defendant jumped down with alacrity. He headed straight for his tormentor, jarred him with a stiff left hook, lifted him a foot off the ground with a terrific uppercut, grabbed him before he could fall, and tossed him halfway across the room. He then turned to the judge and explained, "I pushed the plaintiff just about one-tenth as hard as that, Your Honor."

No Dessert

The fine points of the art of cooking were involved in a trial. Each lawyer was allowed twenty minutes to present his case. The attorney for the defense warmed to the task because he was an amateur cook of no mean ability. He discoursed for quite a while on the various tricks employed by good chefs, how they seasoned the foods, and how they had to be so exact in their measurements. He was just about to apply his lecture on cooking to the case at hand when the judge interrupted.

"Better turn the gas off," he suggested, looking up at the clock, "your time is up."
