The Scold's Bridle.

In Queen Elizabeth's day an instrument of torture was used to prevent women from scolding and nagging. It consisted of an iron framework, called the "scold's bridle," somewhat similar to a cage, which was slipped over the head of the person whom it was desired to punish. In the framework were eyeholes and a specially prepared projection in front for the tongue of the victim. The interior of the projection was lined with spikes, so that if the wearer attempted to speak her tongue was liable to get badly lacerated. It did not often require more than one application of this torture to break the gossip of her unpleasant habit.

"The Marseillaise."

The words and music of the famous battle hymn, "The Marseillaise," usually are ascribed to Rouget de Lille, a French engineer officer, who it is said, composed it by request, about 1797, to cheer up the conscripts at Strasburg. It derived its name from a body of troops from Marseilles, who played and sang the piece as they marched into Paris. De Lille was pensioned by Louis Philippe in 1830 and died in 1836. It is safe to say that no other song ever written has stirred the heart like "The Marseillaise." It will probably live forever.—New York American.

A Mean Thrust.

"Have you ever placed yourself in the hands of a beauty doctor, Mrs. Muggworth?"

"Why do you ask me that?"

"My husband wants me to go to one."

"Yes. I have been taking regular treatments from one for the past year."

"Then I think I'll not go. It seems to be useless."—Chicago Record-Herald.

The Gentle Art of Making Enemies.

Visitor (to particular friend, who has had several new dresses laid on the bed to choose from)—I do wish you wouldn't tell me the name of the woman you sell your things to. I've got a lot of old gowns like these that I want to get rid of.—London Punch

A Remarkable Comedy.

The most remarkable comedy ever written is "The Visionaries," by Desmarets, the protege of Richelieu. Every character in the play has a hallucination of one kind or another. One is a coward who thinks he has conquered the world, another a poet who conceives himself better than Homer, another a lover who becomes enamored of every heroine he reads of in a romance, another a beggar who thinks himself richer than Croesus.

That Was One, Surely.

"Don't tell me there are no such things as miracles nowadays."

"Show me one and I'll believe that there may still be such things."

"I saw one yesterday. Four musical experts were sitting at a table in a club to which I belong, and they agreed in their opinion of Wagner."—Chicago Record-Herald.

He Admits It Himself.

Hettie—Harry is always to be trusted. He has never deceived me.

Clara—How do you know that?

Hettie—Know it? Why, he told me so himself only last evening.

Not That Kind.

Boy (to music shop assistant)—Copy of "Pansy Faces," please, miss. Assistant—In what key? Boy—Key? She didn't say nothing about keys. Assistant—Do you know if the lady is a soprano or contralto? Boy—Lor' bless you, miss, she ain't one of them sort. She's the bar maid across at the Red Lion.—London Tit-Bits.

Fancy and Fast.

Office Boy—Miss, the publisher regrets to state that notwithstanding the obvious merits of your song it is at present unavailable.

Fair Damsel—Oh! Did he really say that?

Office Boy—Well—or not actually. He said: "Take it away! It makes me sick."—Chicago News
