TRIAL OF POLISH PRIEST CAUSES A STIR IN RUSSIA

LENINGRAD, April 16.—(By the Associated Press.)—Father Branislav Oussas, the Polish priese who was one of those to have been exchanged for the two Polish communist officers recently murdered while enroute to Russit under police guard, was arraigned today on immoral treatment of young girls in his employ. The court decided to try the case in his absence and several young women were heard in Camera, much of the testimony being unprintable.

The case has excited much interest throughout Russia. Crowds packed the courtroom today but the sensation seekers were disappointed when the judge announced that the testimony would be heard in private.

Father Oussas denied the competency of the soviet court to try him, insisting that he should be tried under the Polish criminal code in his own country. The public prosecutor, M. Krylenko, said a diplomatic passport did not give foreigners the right to commit crime in Russian territory, and demanded that the priest should be sentenced to five years' solitary confinement.

The prosecutor said that the case possesses political significance far transcending its mere criminal features. "As the fundamental aim of the revolutionary regime is to safeguard the soviet republic, it is our duty to try this man, who is a danger to the state," he said.

Father Oussas was formerly a member of the Polish repatriation commission here, and as such he employed a staff of female typists and clerical assistants.

The Screen

Tom Mix Coming to Rialto.

Tom Mix is at the Rialto theater tomorrow and Saturday in "The Deadwood Coach," a story of the old days when rapine and murder were the daily occupation of that rough class of men who nearly always precede civilization. "The Deadwood Coach" is based on Clarence Mulford's novel, "The Orphan," which is the name of a much feared line highwayman who terrorizes a mining district.

Everyone who sees "The Great White Way," now running at the Rialto theater, comes away talking about the prize fight scene. Oscar Shaw is one movie hero who really looks and acts the part of a "pug," and his opponent is none other than Pete Hartley, the well known lightweight contender. They stage a three-round mill that is the best ever in reelism.
