CAMEL MILDNESS BASIS CAMPAIGN OF ADVERTISING

The mildness of Camels is the theme of the new cigarette advertising campaign of the R. J. Reynolds Tobacco company, which features the announcement that Camels are "so mild you can smoke all you want." It is supported by statements from a representative group of athletic stars and champions in various sports who smoke Camels and have found that "they don't get your wind."

The new campaign of advertising is now appearing regularly in The Mail Tribune. It is expected that Camel's consistent policy of newspaper advertising will be continued.

In the first advertisement Gene Sarazen, famous golf champion, pictured both smoking a Camel and in action, is quoted: "Traveling and playing as much as I do, I have to keep in condition. I smoke Camels steadily. They're so mild they never get my 'wind' or nerves."

Other athletes who comment on the mildness of Camels in statements accompanied by "action" photographs are Georgia Coleman, holder of 13 national and Olympic diving championships; Melvin Ott, batting star of the New York Giants baseball team; John L. Skillman, squash racquets champion; Bill Miller, four times national sculling champion, and Jim Lancaster, captain of an undefeated New York university basketball team. It is pointed out that a cigarette whose mildness has won the patronage of outstanding athletes—who have to know what real tobacco mildness is—naturally has a mildness which will appeal to the non-athletic smoker as well.

The quality of the tobaccos used in the manufacture of Camels is consistently stressed. Each advertisement gives prominent display to the statement, signed by R. J. Reynolds Tobacco company, that "Camels are made from finer, more expensive tobaccos—Turkish and Domestic—than any other popular brand."
