The Capital Parade

Senator Bob Wagner to take the governorship. But in default of this, it's thought that Lehman is the only man who can beat Dewey. Therefore the president, in the midst of an effort to realign all liberals and conservatives, may take time off to give the New York governorship to the conservative Lehman.

The final irony of the party system in New York is illustrated by the position of Mayor Fiorello H. La Guardia. The doughty bouncing little mayor is probably the best vote getter and most effective politician in New York. He is also an ardent liberal of the new deal type. He hates Governor Lehman, and he dislikes Tom Dewey. Because he is independent of party, there will be no call on him to support either. And thus it's likely that New York's biggest public figure will calmly remain neural in the state's most important contest.

Altogether, the "politics of principle" don't seem to be doing very well in New York.
