Northern Dockworkers Oppose Return To Work

London —(U.P.)— A force of 300 striking dockworkers from Britain's northern ports "invaded" the London waterfront today to halt a back to work movement by local longshoremen.

Hundreds of policemen lined up shoulder to shoulder to prevent clashes between the provincial strikers and the London dockmen, all members of the same union.

The "invasion" was touched off by the decision of the London workers to end a five-week strike and return to work today while northern port members were voting to stay out.

First reports said that only several hundred men returned to work of the nearly 10,000 that walked out five weeks ago in sympathy with their fellow workers in the northern ports.
