PROGRESS

1910

"Where are you going, my pretty maid?"

"I'm going a-milking, sir," she said.

'May I go with you, my pretty maid?"

"No, sir! We're not introduced!" she said.

1921

"Hey, kid, where are you blowing today?"

"To dance—you boob—don't you get gay!"

"May I hang on while you terpsichore?"

"Break in! Get wise! Don't ask any more."

When you consider the frequency of the phrase, "Senate Takes Steps," in newspaper headlines, don't you wonder why it never seems to get anywhere?

It may have been a typographical error or it may not. But anyhow a Klamath Falls grocer recently announced to his patrons that "I will save you money." Still it's nice to know that there's somebody who can do it.

Captain Siemens says that we can quote him as sayin' that any man, young or old, who hasn't a smile for a pretty girl is 90 per cent dead.

For Bald Heads

To produce hair on a bald head, soak the head in salt water until the hair gets dry, and when it comes out for a drink grab it and tie it in a knot—Contributed by Chas. F. Stone, W. O. Smith and J. I. Beard.

Here's Office Diplomacy, Girls

"The "dear thing" entered the office smilingly and stated that she was a stenographer, and came in reply to his ad. The boss surveyed her with interest. She was very nice to look upon—would make a splendid stenog. The boss rubbed his bald head and inquired:

"Who was your last employer?" It was the customary interrogation, you know.

"Smith Company."

"How long were you in their employ?"

"A very short time."

"Uh, Did you—er—quit?"

"I was fired."

The boss frowned.

"Uh, huh, may I enquire why?"

"Well, you see, Mrs. Smith was always bobbing into the office."

"Yes."

"And one day—"

"Go on."

"And—say, what salary goes with this job?"

"Well, business is not very—"

"As I was saying, one day Mrs. Smith came rushing in and—"

"Yes."

"Caught me kissing my employer. I would not accept a position at less than $40 a week."

"A mere trifle, Miss, a mere trifle. You start in the morning."

Summer suits are to be fuller this year. Wallets after they have been purchased will be far otherwise.

As for us, our summer suit will be worn thinner—thinner even than it was when we interned it in camphor last fall.
