Editors Called To Testify Before Taxation Group

SALEM (AP) — Four editorial writers for the Portland Oregonian were subpoenaed Thursday night to testify before the House Taxation Committee next Monday.

The subpoenas were ordered by Committee Chairman Clarence Barton (D-Coquille), who has been highly critical of the newspaper's editorials.

Shortly after his committee opened a hearing on income tax bills, Barton called the names of the four writers—Herbert Lundy, editor of the editorial page; and associate editors Al McCready, Malcolm Bauer and Jalmar Johnson.

Only Bauer was in the room. Barton invited him to testify, and Bauer replied that he only came to listen.

Then Barton had Sergeant at Arms Patrick McCarthy give Bauer the subpoena, and told McCarthy to serve the other three.

The action was nearly unprecedented. The Legislature's committees have had the subpoena power for only four years and it is rarely used.

Barton told Bauer and the audience of 200 persons:

"The Oregonian has gratuitously given this committee advice, telling us whether we are proceeding too fast or at a snail's pace. The editors must have done a great deal of research. I think in fairness to this committee and to the public that you should testify."

Bauer replied that he was "flattered. The Oregonian's advice is available every morning."

After serving the subpoena on Bauer, Barton continued that "this committee is trying desperately to do a good job. You have a sounding board that we don't have. We're entitled to have the background of your research and thinking."

The hearing was on income tax bills which would reduce the rates but would eliminate all deductions.

Representatives of churches, private colleges and charities argued that elimination of the deduction for charitable contributions would hamper them in getting funds.

Barton answered that the Tax Commission has conducted research which shows that these charitable organizations get just as much money in states where contributions are not deductible as they do in states where the deduction is allowed.

Dr. G. Herbert Smith, president of Willamette University, said the bill "would make us have to appeal harder for funds than ever before. People would get the idea that the state isn't interested in private colleges, churches and charities."

The bills were proposed by Gov. Mark Hatfield and the committee. They would have top tax rates of 7 or 8 per cent, compared with the present top of 9.5 per cent. The net revenue effect of the bills would not be much different than the present law, but the bills would make persons in the lowest income groups pay higher taxes.

Election Set For May 4

Voters of Klamath Falls School District 1 who want to run for office on the school board should apply right away.

The directors' election is slated May 4, and closing date of registration is April 3. Two posts are up for grabs. They are those of J. C. Renie, chairman of the board, whose five-year term is expiring, and of Mrs. Margaret Barnes, temporarily appointed to fill the post of Robert Kent, who resigned last fall.

Clerk of the board Harold Ashley said no applications have been received.

Board members must have been registered to vote 30 days before election, and they must have been residents of District 1 for six months previous to election.
