Water Safety Hints Given

A pure, safe water supply is one of the most important things to keep in mind when living on a farm or ranch, or staying at your favorite camping site, a new bulletin published by the Oregon State College extension service points out.

Nearly one-fifth of the 20,000 water samples checked by the Oregon State Board of Health last year tested unsafe, emphasizing the need for careful selection and protection of water sources.

Streams and ponds are often plentiful in rural areas, but these surface-water supplies are never safe until the water has been treated, the bulletin emphasizes. Wells and properly protected springs are listed as safer water sources.

The bulletin gives advice on location of wells, tells how to protect a well from surface-water contamination, and explains how to build a pumphouse that will protect both the well and the pump. Protection of springs is also covered.

Ways to check the chemical quality of water, and suggestions on purifying water supplies, are listed in the bulletin. Instructions for obtaining a water analysis from the State Board of Health are given.

The bulletin, titled "Safeguarding Rural Water Supplies," was written by M. G. Huber, OSC extension agricultural engineer. Oregon residents can obtain copies on request at their county extension office, or from the OSC bulletin clerk in Corvallis.

MILLION-DOLLAR GATE

NEW YORK (UPI)—The Jack Dempsey-Georges Carpentier fight at Jersey City, N.J., on July 2, 1921, not only drew boxing's first million-dollar gate ($1,789,238), but it was the first world title fight to be radio broadcast.

SIP NOT

YORK, Maine (UPI) — The Maine Department of Health and Welfare, says Maud Muller's spring, made famous by John Greenleaf Whittier's poem, is no longer fit to drink from.
