Objectives Of Students Outlined

By RELMAN MORIN

CHARLOTTE, N. C. (AP)—Three weeks ago, a group of Negro college students entered a variety chain store in Greensboro, N.C., and sat down at the lunch counter.

They were not served. There was no disturbance.

Four days later, that store and another in a different chain temporarily closed their doors.

In the next week, this incident was re-enacted in a half-dozen other cities in North Carolina. Similar demonstrations were held in South Carolina, Virginia, Tennessee and Florida.

All followed much the same pattern.

Most of the demonstrators were Negro college students. In some instances, white students joined them. All were well dressed. They were quiet. While awaiting service at the lunch counters, they read college text books. Some read the Bible.

What's it all about? Is it an organized movement? What is the over-all objective?

"It's a manifestation of the unrest among this generation of students," says Joseph Charles Jones, Negro divinity student in Charlotte. "It comes from their desire to dramatize the injustice of the Negro's position.

"It is part of their feeling about the schools, the vote—civil rights in general."

Jones organized the movement in Charlotte. He prefers to be called its spokesman, not its leader.

He is 22, slim, neatly dressed, quiet in manner and speech. He hopes to be ordained a Presybterian minister when he finishes next year at Johnson C. Smith University in Charlotte.

He said he heard about the Greensboro incident when he was motoring to Charlotte from Washington.

"I discovered that many of the students here were anxious to go downtown to the stores," he said. "But there was no leadership or defined purpose. I felt that someone had to give it direction, to make the Charlotte movement meaningful and purposeful."

Alabama's 1949 football team holds the Southeastern Conference record for the fewest penalties in one season—31 times for 271 yards.
