Educated Postal Employes Urged To Find Other Jobs

WASHINGTON (UPI) — The Post Office Department is trying to encourage its most highly educated employes—Negro and white—to find other government jobs, a spokesman said today.

The department, the largest employer of Negroes in the country, wants its employes to look for better jobs being offered by other agencies, the spokesman said.

The program of encouraging workers with college educations to leave the postal service is an outgrowth of efforts to eliminate racial discrimination within the postal system.

The department is conducting a survey of the educational attainments of its employes.

The survey revealed that 44 per cent of the clerks and carriers in Southern post offices had at least some college education. More than half of the college-educated clerks and carriers were Negroes.

Assistant Postmaster General Richard Murphy said the department felt a postal clerk or a carrier had no special need of a college education. But, since 85 per cent of the postal employes are clerks or carriers, there is not enough room to promote all the deserving workers, he said.

The Civil Service Commission conducted a special examination among employes of the Birmingham, Ala., post office.
