TAKING TEA.

I know a room which simply is
So dear a paradise of bliss,
That were I called to one that lies
Beyond the earth, in lifted skies,
I think I'd rather cling to this.

Soft curtains gently shut away
The chill and sunny afternoon;
An open fire burns red and clear,
Rose scented is the atmosphere
As garden airs in fragrant June.

While she arranges cup and spoon,
Like snowy birds her fingers fair
Hover about that Chinese tray;
Sweetly distracted is her air
'Twixt talking art and pouring cream.

Why does she think I haunt her house
Each day as five o'clock draws near?
Does she suppose the mild carouse
Of sipping tea and nibbling cakes
Is all the joy my soul can ask?

Yet such the attitude she takes;
Her friendly thoughts quite centered seem
Not on my passion, not on me,
But on the very trivial task
Of pouring out a cup of tea.

Her earnestness is sweet to see.
Her yearning eyes quite drive me mad;
"Too strong? A little sugar? No?
But you are sure you like it so?
Perfection? I'm so very glad!"

Sometimes I feel so broken up
I really think I'll smash my cup
Down on the hearth and tell her, "Sweet,
There let it lie, where day by day
My heart lies, shattered, at your feet."

ANN BEDE'S DEBT.

The judges were in their places.

Outside the fog weighed heavily upon the shapeless building, effaced the walls and glued itself to the windows, concealing their frosty flowering.

In the hall itself the air was thick and stifling. It smelled of sheep skins, peasants, cau de vie, and the leaden ventilators in the upper glasses of the skylight turned slowly and slothfully.

The jurors, too, leaned wearily against the backs of their chairs. One of them had closed his eyes and let his hand fall inert, lulled to somnolence by the monotonous scratching of the clerk's pen. Another tapped and softly beat the rat-a-plan with his pencil on the table.

The president pushed his spectacles to the tip of his nose and mopped his damp brow, his stern gray eyes, with a glacial stare, bent fixedly upon the door whence would issue the culprits in course of trial, and on whom they waited to pronounce the sentence.

"Is there not still another one?" demanded he, presently, of the sleepy looking tipstaff at his elbow in a hard, resonant voice.

"One," responded the other; "a girl."

"Eh bien! bring her in then," said the president.

The crier called, the door opened, the girl entered.

A current of fresh air glided in with her and softly fanned the faces and tickled the lashes of the curious assistants. At the same moment a ray of sunlight pierced the shrouding fog and danced between the frosty etchings of the panes across the dusty walls and furniture of the hall of audience.

"A girl" had said the tipstaff—a child, rather, scarcely more than on the verge of maidenhood, and so pretty in her little furred jacket, embroidered with wreaths and blossoms and fitting like the skin the rounded waist, straight and slender as the stem of a young palm. Her black eyes were lowered to the floor, but her white brow was clear and unclouded.

"What is it that you have done, my child?" questioned the president indifferently.

The girl nervously rearranged her handkerchief that covered her head, caught her breath heavily, then answered, sighing:

"My affair is sad, M. le President, very, very sad."

Her voice, soft and dolorous, went to the heart like good music, that, even when one hears it no longer, seems still to vibrate in the air and change everything by its mysterious influence.

The faces of the jurors were no longer so morose. The portrait of the king, and farther away still of the Judex Curiæ, appeared to make to her from the silent wall benignant signs, encouraging her to bravely recount the affair "so very, very sad."

"But see you," said she, "this writing: "it will tell you better than I can."

Only she had first to seek it; to unclasp the buttons of her corsage and draw it from her bosom—a piece of crackling parchment, stamped and closed with the ponderous official seal.

"A judgment," murmured the president, running his eye over the paper, "a judgment against Anne Bede, assigned to begin today a punishment of six months' imprisonment."

The girl nodded sorrowfully; the handkerchief, loosened by the movement, fell from her head, and a heavy tress of her long black hair, all unbound, veiled her features. It sought, perhaps, to shield them from the gaze of the people, for if she was white as a lily a while ago, she was purple with shame at this moment.

"It is a week since we received it," stammered she in a broken voice. "The court officer brought it himself and explained what it wished to tell us, and my poor mother said to me: 'Thou must go, my child, the law is the law, and one should not take it as a pleasantry.' I have come, therefore, to—to begin the six months!"

The president wiped his glasses, then wiped them again, his cold, stern gaze seeking the faces of his colleagues, the windows, the floor, the great iron stove, through whose grated door fiery eyes seemed to sparkle and threateningly regard him.

"The law," murmured he, "the law is the law!"

And he read anew the summary before him, the black, sprawling scratches across the white page, declaring "Anne Bede condemned to six months' imprisonment for receiving stolen goods."

Meanwhile the leaden ventilator had [illegible] its race and spun furiously.

The head of the president bent affirmatively before this importunate voice; he dropped his eyes and touched the bell for the tipstaff.

"Accompany Anne Bede," said he, "to the house of the inspector of prisons."

The man bowed, the child turned obediently, but her little rose red lips opened and shook tremulously, as if words were on them that she could not speak.

"Perhaps, my child," said the president, noticing her distress, "perhaps you have still something to say to us."

"Only—that I am Lizette, Lizette Bede, M. le President; Anne Bede was my sister, and we buried her, poor girl! a week ago."

"'Twas not you, then, that was condemned and sentenced?" cried the president, surprised.

"Ah! bon Dieu, no! Why should I have been condemned who have never done harm to a fly?"

"Then why are you here, mad child that you are?"

"Because, if you please, it is because Anne died while this business was before the royal table" (the lower court of Hungary). "It was when she was lying in her coffin all cold and white that this order concerning the six months arrived, certifying that she must submit. Oh! how she had waited and prayed for it, and tried so hard to live to receive it! She had never dreamed of this, M. le President, and when they had taken her away with closed eyes, mute and deaf for ever, my mother and I told ourselves that we must repair the wrong she had done because of her fiance, Gabriel Karloney. It was for him, and without knowing it, that she sinned and we thought"——

"What, my child?"

"That to let her rest peacefully in her mortal ashes, and that no one should say she owed them anything, that we must do as I said—repair the wrong done by her. My mother has paid the amende for the goods, and I have come, M. le President, to serve in her place the six months in the county prison."

To serve in her sister's place!

What innocence, what simplicity!

The jurors smiled broadly; the face of the president was no longer cold or ceremonious, nor was it precisely his brow from which he mopped the moisture with a large yellow handkerchief.

"It is well," said he; "you were right, my child, but—but, now that I think of it"——

He stopped, frowned, and seemed to reflect intently—"now that I think of it," continued he, "there was an error in this affair. We have, my dear child, sent you the wrong document."

"The wrong document, M. le President?" faltered Lizette, raising her great, sorrowful eyes to his face with a gaze of heartbreaking reproach, "the wrong document?"

She could say no more, and the president himself was no less moved.

"The wrong document, my child, yes," said he firmly, rising from his seat to tenderly pass his hand across the shining hair, "beyond there"—pointing to the heaven above them through the mist veiled window—"Justice has given another verdict!

"Go now to thy mother and tell her from me that thy sister was not a criminal—that Anne was innocent."

"Before God, at least," added he, in a tone only audible to his own great heart, "before God, at least!"—Translated for Short Stories from the Hungarian of Mikszrath by E. C. Waggener.

New Mode of Engraving.

A French scientist has lately introduced a process for the engraving of designs on wood, leather or similar materials by means of a pencil or tool, the point of which is constantly at red heat. After a series of experiments with hot irons and platinum wire heated by electricity, a special tool was finally devised by the inventor of this process, which renders the operation extremely simple.

The tool in question is another application of the cautery instrument used by surgeons. The pencil has a wooden handle upon which is mounted a small platinum tube with a fine point. Two separate receptacles communicate with the tool by means of a rubber tube; one of these contains a hydro-carbon, such as alcohol, benzine or wood spirit, and the other contains compressed air.

A constant flow of the hydro-carbon vapor is maintained at the point of the tool, which is thereby kept in a state of intense heat. Both receptacles are provided with regulating apparatus, by which the supply of ink can be adjusted or cut off, as desired. The operation of tracing designs on wood work and leather is thus simplified to the utmost possible extent. A tracing of the design is made on the article to be ornamented, and any degree of relief is instantly effected, very little skill on the part of the operator being required. The new process will be of the greatest service to bookbinders, carpenters and others, as well as affording a ready means of labeling cases, barrels, etc.—New York Commercial Advertiser.

The Mason and Dixon Line.

The Mason and Dixon line runs along the parallel of latitude 39 degs. 43 min., 26 degs. 3 min., separating Pennsylvania from Maryland. It was drawn by two distinguished English surveyors, Charles Mason and Jeremiah Dixon, who began their work in 1763 and finished it in 1767. The line is marked by stones set at intervals of five miles, each having the arms of Lord Baltimore engraved upon one side and those of the Penn family upon the other. Besides these large stones set to mark each fifth mile, smaller stones were set at the end of each mile, these having a large P engraved upon one side and the letter M on the other—these intended as initial letters of Pennsylvania and Maryland.

All of these stones were engraved in [illegible] the Mason and Dixon line.

Chopped Off His Own Hand by Accident.

Graham T. Holtzclaw, a well known young attorney, cut off his own left hand with a hand ax. He had arrived home late for breakfast with a steak which he desired the cook, Mary, to prepare for him. In a good natured way he told her that if she would cook the steak he would cut some kindling. With a whetstone he sharpened a hand ax, the blade of which is about five inches broad, and proceeded to cut the kindling.

Taking a soggy piece of pine block, he held it upright on the chopping block, and aimed a heavy blow to split it. The block slipped as the ax blade descended, and the young man's left hand was thrown under the blade. The blade struck his wrist at the joint, and the hand was completely severed, rolling to the ground beside the block.

Holtzclaw seized the stump of the left arm in his right hand and called for help. The cook, with great presence of mind, held the arm between both of her hands tightly, stopping the spurting blood, and the injured young man called for a string. With a stout cord the stump of the arm was tied so as to effectually prevent bleeding.—Chattanooga Times.

The Railroad Must Pay.

A verdict for $5,000 damages was rendered in the court of common pleas against the Western Maryland Railroad company and in favor of Mrs. Mary A. Herold. The accident for which damages were claimed occurred on Sept. 17, 1885, at the Wilson Sanitarium grounds. Mrs. Herold had taken a child to the sanitarium to spend the day, and in the evening with others boarded the car, which had been left on a switch. Some one, presumably a child, released the brake, and the car started down a small incline toward the main track. A panic ensued among the passengers, and Mrs. Herold, who was then 63 years old, jumped to the ground, breaking her right shoulder blade and left leg. The verdict was for the full amount claimed. Col. Charles Marshall, counsel for the railroad, gave notice that he would apply for a new trial.—Baltimore Sun.

Arkwright's Old Mill Burned.

A calamity has fallen upon Cromford. The historic old cotton mill, where Arkwright first set up his cotton spinning machinery, caught fire, and, though six fire engines played upon it, nothing could be saved. A large portion of the mill has long been standing empty, as the motive power (water) was inadequate, but for the last seven years Mr. Charles Hill, of Bridge House, Cromford, has used one portion of it for finishing and storing the goods made at his factories at Via Gellia and Milford. The loss will be fully £10,000. The roofs and walls have given way, but the houses near have been saved.—Pall Mall Gazette.

Attacked by Catamounts.

Mrs. Jaynes and her son, of Stringtown, I. T., hearing a commotion in their barn the other night, proceeded to investigate, whereupon a catamount sprang upon the woman and buried its teeth in her neck. The son killed the beast and also dispatched another cat, which had been tearing the horses. The fierce animals weighed thirty and thirty-five pounds respectively. Mrs. Jaynes, who was painfully injured, will recover.—Philadelphia Ledger.

Paid the Principal Three Times Over.

One of the oldest mortgages in the state was "lifted" in Lubec last week. Maj. Trescott, a revolutionary hero, who died in Lubec in 1826, left by his will the sum of $300, the income of which was to be devoted to the use of public schools in district No. 3, in that town. The money has been invested in a mortgage on one piece of real estate in Lubec for fifty years, and the interest regularly paid.—Pittsfield (Mass.) Advertiser.

Battle Ships for Germany.

Eleven battle ships, with an aggregate displacement of 70,000 tons, are now being built for the German government—three at Bremen, two at Gaarden, near Kiel, one at Wilhelmshafen, three at Dantzig and two at Bredow, near Stettin. At Elberg no fewer than seventy torpedo boats are being built for the government.—London Truth.

A Bright Four-Year-Old.

Four-year-old Robert asked his mother the meaning of Thanksgiving day. After listening attentively while being told that the day is set apart as a day of thanksgiving to God for ripening the fruits, vegetables, etc., he said:

"Well, I don't think God bleached the celery very well this year!"—Boston Transcript.

A barrel of apples opened near the isle of Wight had a very fine apple in the center with this message written on a piece of paper: "If any young lady who chances to eat this apple is desirous of matrimony she will please correspond with Hartley Marshall, of Falkland Ridge, Annapolis county, Nova Scotia."

James Whitcomb Riley is a busy literary worker. Some one recently asked the poet to do a piece of work, and he replied: "I can't! In the writing line I was never so involved before. Even the hope of waking to find myself famous is denied me, since I haven't time in which to fall asleep."

While excavating for the foundation of a new opera house in Atlanta, Ga., last week, workmen found a live snake "six feet below the surface." It was an ugly, poisonous moccasin, nearly five feet long, and fought hard until killed.

A new sketching apparatus for cyclists has recently appeared in England. The paper is placed on a small board in front of the cyclist, and the work can be roughly contoured in about half the time ordinarily required.

THE CRY OF MILLIONS!
OH, MY BACK!
STOP IT NOW,
SOON IT WILL BE TOO LATE.
I have been troubled many years with disease of the kidneys and have tried many different remedies and have sought aid from different physicians without relief. About the 15th of April I was suffering from a very violent attack that almost prostrated me in such a manner that I was bent over. When I sat down it was almost impossible for me to get up alone, or to put on my clothes, when kind Providence sent Dr. Henley, with the OREGON KIDNEY TEA, to my hotel. I immediately commenced using the tea. It had an almost miraculous effect, and to the astonishment of all the guests at the hotel, in a few days, I am happy to state, that I was a new man. I will recommend the tea to all afflicted as I have been.
