IT'S YOUR LAW

Respect For Law Makes Democracy Live

RELEVANT FACTS

A trial ends disputes. To do so justly gets a court disputed facts through witnesses under rules of evidence.

You hear your lawyer object: The proposed evidence is "irrelevant, immaterial, and incompetent." Unless he does object then and there, he may lose your right to appeal in higher courts later on.

1. If he objects to "irrelevant" evidence, he means the facts offered are beside the point. If you sue Jones for a debt, you might arouse the jury by showing that he beats his wife. Though true, the beatings scarcely prove your claim that Jones owes you money. Irrelevant.

2. If your lawyer objects to "immaterial" evidence, he is saying, in effect, that it may have something to do with the case all right, but would not tilt the scales either way. It has little weight.

3. If he objects to "incompetent" evidence, he is saying either that the witness or the facts are ruled out, no matter how true, relevant, or material they may be. For example, it is against public policy and "incompetent" for a wife to testify against her husband in most criminal trials.

Hearsay, too, is mostly "incompetent." Suppose in a theft case Jones told a jury that he heard Smith tell Green that he saw Brown steal a car. In a theft case courts would rule out such a story as "hearsay" and incompetent. Like gossip, you cannot rely on hearsay nor test it by cross-examination. Green might have been talking out of spite or telling a tall tale for fun.

But Brown's slander suit against Smith might well be something else. Jones' evidence would be material, relevant, and competent: For it would tend to show that by his gossip Smith had been hurting Brown's good name.

As a rule only an expert can give competent "opinion" evidence. A doctor could give an opinion as to a cause of death.

If the judge errs in ruling on evidence, your lawyer can ask for a new trial. Failing this, he can go to a higher court. There he must show that (1) the judge did err, and (2) his error unfairly harmed your case.
