HE MARCHED WITH SHERMAN, trudged all the way on foot, over mountain and through morass, carrying knapsack and gun, slept on brush heaps to keep out of the mud, caught cold, from the effects of which his friends thought he would never recover. Lingering with slow consumption for many years, he saw Dr Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery advertised in a country newspaper, and he determined to try it. A few bottles worked a change; six months' continued use cured him. Always too independent to ask his country for a pension, he now says he needs none. He helped save his country, he saved himself! OUR STORY.

[The CAPITAL JOURNAL will contain regularly a story, completed in one or two numbers.]

A SINGULAR CASE.

"Well, what is it?"

'Twas thus I addressed my medical friend, Van Leonard, who, after some minutes of deep thought, drew a long breath with some appearance of relief.

"I was thinking of a singular case—"

"That occurred in your practice, I suppose?" I queried.

"Not exactly, and yet in reply I could say yes! Your asking me about Thimbault, the mesmerist reminded me of it. It was a singular case."

"If mesmerism, or odyllic force, is in any way concerned in the case, let me hear it by all means," I replied.

We were sitting in Van Leonard's office, and I had called on purpose to consult him in regard to one Thimbault, who was creating a sensation in social circles by his manifestations of magnetic or hypnotic power.

"What was the case?" I inquired.

My friend indulged in a reverie for some moments, as he in an absent manner puffed away at his fragrant Havana. Then he gently flipped the ashes from the end of his cigar and continued:

"The sad death not long since of a popular official in a neighboring city, after a defalcation which no one had suspected or even deemed in the slightest degree probable, brought this case to my mind. It occurred some years ago in the town of Blank, where in then resided."

"Tell me all about it," said I, settling myself into a listening attitude.

"As I said, Blank was my residence then. I practiced my profession, and from frequent conversations with an instructor in our city academy I became deeply interested in phrenology and biology. Prof. Franklin was the man's name. Besides being a man of extensive learning, he possessed keen penetration, and I sometimes imagined he could read my very thoughts. He would descant in the most intereting manner about a life-force, call it what you may, odyllic or magnetic force, by which strong natures controlled the will and even the physical powers of others. 'Sometimes I have tried it on my refractory pupils,' he would say, 'and they would afterward declare I had bewitched them. It would be well,' he sometimes added, 'for you doctors to study the science of biology more. It might aid you in controlling the diseases of your patients by enabling you to control the patients.'

"My mother was alive at that time, and cultivated a farm in the neighborhood of Blank, in which I myself was interested as a legatee. Customarily I paid her city and county taxes as well as my own, and thus became quite intimate with Judge Alden, the city and county treasurer. Alden was a most amiable and genial man, a member of the Methodist church, and of unimpeachable probity and veracity. I liked to converse with him, for he had been a great reader.

"Alden had once been judge of our Superior court, and so great was his probity that year after year he was elected city treasurer. But in the course of time a change occurred in his appearance. Signs of care and concern began to appear on his face. At times an air distrait took possession of him, and at last wrinkles and gray hairs became plainly visible. A close observer could discern a slight absence of that easy and genial conversational power which had always characterized him and which had made his company a pleasure. The smile was still on his countenance, but it appeared strained.

"'Have you noticed the change which has come over Judge Alden?' asked Prof. Franklin of me one day.

"'Oh, I suppose it is the usual change superinduced by age and business cares,' I replied.

"'Don't be too sure. There is always a deep-seated cause for such radical changes.'

The subject passed from my mind until a few weeks afterward, when the pulic was astounded by the announcement that Alden was a defaulter to the amount of at least $25,000; and experts proved it by an examination of his books."

"That accounts then," I ejaculated, "for those lines of care and concern. A troubled conscience, you know. What did he say for himself?"

"He did not seem to know what to say. He admitted receiving the money, as the figures in his books declared. But what had become of it, he did not remember. He disclaimed all intentional defalcation, and those who knew him best believed him."

"Had he not been speculating in stocks?" I asked.

"There was no evidence of such a thing."

"Had he not bought property in his wife's name?" I inquired again.

"None at all. It was admitted that he had been forbearing with many dilatory taxpayers, and in some cases he had gone so far as to charge himself with the taxes of personal friends on their solemn promise to pay the taxes and not let him suffer by the indiscretion. He had even made occasional loans of the public money to friends in great need, taking their personal notes. But these amounts were comparatively small, and in an emergency could have been realized on the notes themselves. All these excuses his friends made for him in order to shield him from the charge of barefaced corruption and dishonesty.

"Still there was the absence of $25,000. What could that be but defalcation?" said I.

"Just so!" replied Van Leonard. "It was a singular case, for amid it all, many, and I among them, refused to believe him guilty of outright defalcation. To say that the community was shocked and astounded is stating the case mildly. But the sad, ugly fact remained that $25,000 of the public funds were missing and the whole blame and responsibility rested upon one whom all had respected, admired and trusted.

"I can't account for it," he would say, "but I know that I have neither wasted nor stolen the money," and across his countenance would flit an expression of pitiable insanity. I hardly knew what to think of him.

"Well, what did the city council do?" I asked.

"Of course he was summarily displaced, and his bondsmen were called upon to make the defalcation good. But Alden yielded his residence, which, with some property of his, realized about $20,000, thus leaving $5,000 for his bondsmen to pay."

"How did he bear it?"

"I could see that public disgrace was killing him. While he may not have felt blameless, yet he knew that he had not been corrupt or basely fraudulent."

"So he said," I ejaculated.

"Yes, so he said. Well, in musing over the matter one day a thought struck me. I sought Prof. Franklin, with whom I had a lengthy interview. At the conclusion of our discussion he said:

"It will be an interesting experiment, and, so far as I can see, will do no harm."

"You will meet me then at the city treasurer's office at 8 p. m?" I asked.

"I'll be there," he responded.

Punctually at the hour named I drove up to the city hall in my carriage, accompanied by the mayor of the city, Mr. Hall, the city attorney, and Judge Alden. We entered the office of the city treasurer, where we found Prof. Franklin conversing with a couple of the city councilmen and Judge Alden's successor, a Mr. Bond. After our mutual salutations were over I said to the mayor: "Will you have the goodness, sir, to permit the city's fire-proof safe to be opened?"

"At a sign from his honor, the acting treasurer swung open the doors of the huge safe.

"Now, said I, open all the drawers and expose to view all the city's money you may have in the safe at this time."

"This was quickly done by the acting treasurer, who murmured:

"This is all the funds we have here at present. Of course there is more on deposit in the First National bank."

"You are quite sure you have opened all the drawers in the safe, and displayed to view all the money you have in that safe belonging to the city?" I inquired.

"Certainly, sir" was Bond's reply.

"Have you any objections to removing it entirely?"

"Not a particle, if the mayor has no objections.' And at a sign from the mayor the money was removed—'every cent of it,' as the acting treasurer declared.

'All this, as may well be imagined, had wrought considerable excitement in Judge Alden, the defaulter, and I observed Prof. Franklin endeavoring to soothe him, but without avail. Suddenly with a piercing gaze into Alden's eye, he made a few rapid passes, and in an authoritative tone said, 'Come, sir, be calm.'

'In an instant a placid expression of peace an quiet submission rested upon that countenance which for weeks had manifested mental torture.

"Alden was completely under Franklin's control, held by the mighty power of superior will.

"The entire company were now gazing upon the episode in amazement.

"'You are reinstated in the office of city treasurer—' At these words from Franklin the face of Alden shone with a glad smile—'and we desire you to show us the secret compartments of this safe in which you usually kept the bulk of your funds when treasurer.'

"To the great surprise of all Judge Alden stepped to the safe and touched a secret spring by which he was enabled to pull out one of the drawers to double its apparent length. The back compartments of that drawer, the existence of which was unknown to all the other officials present, were packed full of treasury notes and national bank bills. The money was neatly done up in packages, on the labels of which the amount of money in each package was written in Alden's handwriting.

"'Hands off, gentlemen!' I exclaimed, "This is the purpose for which I have brought you here. Mr. Attorney,' I added, 'I wish you to bear testimony to this remarkable find, for it establishes the innocence of Judge Alden most assuredly.'

"Let the money be counted,' replied the city attorney.

"But this was hardly necessary, as above the money in one compartment was a written statement, '$15,000—Louis Alden,' and in the other a similar statement, $10,950—Louis Alden,' which was soon verified.

"As from a dream the hypnotized man waked up, when Prof. Franklin said: 'Arouse, sir, with full possession of your mental powers; and let me congratulate you on the removal of a base but unfounded stigma from your name and reputation.'

"Gazing around with a dignity and gracious self-possession that were truly regal, Judge Alden exclaimed:

"'Gentlemen, this is a happy hour for me! For months I have been wandering in a hideous nightmare. I remember distinctly now the day I received the most of this money, all of which I carefully counted, labelled, and deposited in this safe. On my way home that very night some villian struck me senseless with a sandbag, which, as you know, leaves no bruise. My watch and what money I had on my person were taken, but no doubt the robber expected to obtain some or all of that very money. The blow I received seems to have destroyed all memory of the disposition I made of the money. I knew I had received it, but was utterly unable to remember what had become of it. Miraculously, as it seems, my memory is restored.'"

Here Van Leonard made a pause which I interrupted by asking:

"But how came you to know of that secret drawer?"

"Well, sir," he replied, "in meditating over such a singular case, I just happened to remember seeing Alden open that secret compartment to obtain change for a $100 bill when I was paying taxes one day. And like a flash it occurred to me that the mystery of Alden's defalcation might be solved and the cloud over his good name removed. I revealed my suspicions to Prof. Franklin, whose hypnotic powers I deemed essential to the full consummation of my scheme. The plan was carried out successfully, and both Alden's sanity and reputation were restored."

"And what became of him?"

"His innocence was publicly declared, and as full a restitution as possible was made him. As it turned out he had to his credit $5,000 more than his indebtedness."

"To the great joy of his bondsmen, I wager?"

"Undoubtedly. Well, he took Franklin with him, and with his family set out on a summer tour for mental and physical recuperation. He is dead now."

"And your candid opinion of the whole matter is—"

"That it was a most singular case."—[Atlanta Constitution.

Ordinance No. 196.

An ordinance bill providing for the protection of public sewers, the manner of making connection therewith, and for making a record of such connections.

Be it ordained by the common council of the city of Salem.

SECTION 1.—It shall be unlawful for any person or persons to obstruct or in any manner interfere with any public sewer within the city of Salem, or to make connection therewith without the written permission of the city recorder.

SECTION 2.—Any person desiring such connection, before making the same, shall make application in writing to the recorder for a permit therefor, particularly describing the premises to be drained and the point of junctture with said public sewer.

SECTION 3.—The city recorder is hereby authorized to grant permits for such connections, subject to such restrictions as to the size and material of such connecting pipe, the location of traps and the manner of doing the work, as the sewer and committee on streets and public property may deem necessary. And, when requested by said committee, he shall require from the applicant a bond or other security sufficient in amount to indemnify the city against loss or damage resulting from his carelessness, imperfect work or material, or failure to comply with the terms of the permit or of this ordinance.

SECTION 4. The person obtaining such permit shall make the connection therein authorized in accordance with its terms, under the supervision of the street commissioner as provided in ordinance 174, he shall cause the portion of the street or alley disturbed by him to be placed in good condition; and notify the recorder in writing of the completion of the work, that a record may be kept of such connection.

SECTION 5. The recorder shall make a record, in a suitable book, of all connections heretofore made with the public sewers of the city, and such as may be hereafter made under the provision of this ordinance, showing the location, size and material of the connecting pipe, the point of junctture with the public sewer, and the name of the person or persons to whom the permit was granted together with the time when such connection was made, and shall make such other record relating thereto as said committee may direct.

SECTION 6. Any person violating any of the provisions of sections 1 or 4 of this ordinance, shall upon conviction thereof, before the recorder, be fined in a sum not exceeding fifty dollars. A true copy.
