A Hopi squaw living near San Diego, Cal., will exhibit in the Woman's building at the World's fair a dress of deerskins, richly embroidered with sixteen pounds of beads. She worked for two years in making the garment.

Costa Rica's pavilion at the World's fair will be surrounded by gardens ornamented by a profusion of tropical plants, and in the galleries of the pavilion will be placed more than 3,000 beautiful birds, many of which have very gorgeous plumage.

Mount Aboe, whose terrible eruptions lately have destroyed most of the people of Great Sangir, on which island the volcano is situated, has had many similar outbursts. There was an awful one in 1711, which buried the inhabitants under showers of hot ashes. In 1812 it poured out streams of molten lava no less fatal to human life in their track. In 1855 lava, ashes and boiling water overwhelmed the hapless Sangirians. Since then there has been no great eruption till the present one, but the intervals between the outbursts have been shorter.

A Singular Weapon.

There is a very singular sword in the South Kensington collection, composed of two very thin blades, with half hilts, which are made by a series of catches on the inner side to unite and form a single weapon. From the great beauty of the ornaments and mounting, it was probably made by some renowned armorer for presentation.—Chambers' Journal.

An Interesting Operation.

During the session of parliament of 1891 an honorable member, who, though representing an Irish county, is not of Irish birth, was vehemently opposing a bill introduced by the Irish secretary. "The right honorable gentleman," he said, "is trying to thrust this bill down our throats behind our backs!"—Blackwood's Magazine.

Hindoo Ideas of Beauty.

Hindoo families, when they wish to be particularly lovely, smear themselves with a mixture of saffron and grease, and in nearly all the islands of the Pacific and Indian oceans the women, as well as the men, tattoo a great variety of figures on the face, the lips and the tongue. —Jenness Miller Illustrated.

A Difference of Opinion.

"That's a pretty bad case of convergent strabismus over yonder."

"I think it's rather a bad case of squint."—Jewelers' Circular.

STARTLING FACTS!

The American people are rapidly becoming a mass of nervous wrecks, and the following suggests the best remedy: Alphonso Hempfling, of Butler, Pa., swears that when his son was speechless from St. Vitus Dance, Dr. Miles' Great Restorative Nervine cured him. Mrs. J. R. Miller, of Valparaiso, Ind., J. D. Taylor, of Logansport, Ind., each gained 20 pounds from taking it. Mrs. H. A. Gardner, of Vistula, Ind., was cured of 40 to 50 convulsions a day, and much headache, dizziness, backache, and nervous prostration, by one bottle. Daniel Myers, Brooklyn, Mich., says his daughter was cured of insanity of ten years' standing. Trial bottles and fine book of marvelous cures, FREE at druggists. This remedy contains no opiates.

FOREST MUSINGS.

I love to roam in the pathless woods,
Where nature is clothed in its native attire;
The tender green carpet that covers the ground
Affords a delight that I never have found
In costly temple or gilded spire.

I love the forest wild and wide,
By mother nature planted and filled.
Those moss grown monarchs side by side
Are dearer to me than the trappings of pride
In the costliest temples that man can build.

Science may boast of her treasures of art
That genius has wrought with the chisel and brush.
But all the treasures that art can reveal
Touch not my heart with the rapture I feel
As I sit and muse in the twilight hush.

When evening lets her curtain fall,
And all around is calm and still,
I listen at twilight's solemn hush
To the tender croon of the hermit thrush,
Or the plaintive wail of the whippoorwill.

The brook murmurs low in ferny glen;
Its breath floats cool on the evening air,
Its rhythmical note has a lesson for me:
It hurries away to the boundless sea
And I to a bourne I know not where.

Perhaps "when the mists have rolled away"
And broader prospects open to view,
We shall know that the trials and cares of to-day
Were the tutors that kept us from going astray,
Divinely appointed for me and you.

—Livy Penney in Ellsworth American.

Rare Presence of Mind.

On one occasion our mother's presence of mind saved the life of the child Laura, then a baby of two years old.

We were all staying at the institution for some reason, and the nursery was in the fourth story of the lofty building.

One day our mother came into the room, and to her horror saw little Laura rolling about on the broad window sill, the window being wide open; only a few inches space between her and the edge, and then—the street, fifty feet below.

The nurse was—I know not where; any where save where she ought to have been. Our mother stepped quickly and quietly back out of sight and called gently: "Laura, come here, dear! Come to me! I have something to show you."

A moment's agonized pause—and then she heard the little feet patter on the floor, and in another instant held the child clasped in her arms. If she had screamed or rushed forward the child would have started, and probably would have fallen and been dashed to pieces.—St. Nicholas.

Hindoo Witchcraft.

All Hindoos believe in witchcraft, and, in strange contrast to the old believers in witchery, they believe that young and pretty maidens are the chief actors in such uncanny mummery. If crops are blighted or if a general sickness prevails they write the names of all the young women of the vicinity on separate tree branches and then immerse the stems of the twigs for four hours and a half in a solution of holy water and aromatic herbs. If one or more of the twigs wither during the specified time the young women whose name or names is attached thereto is immediately put to death. Thus the influence of the witch is counteracted, the crops saved and health restored.—St. Louis Republic.

What Pleases a Woman.

It pleases her to be called a sensible little woman.

It pleases her to be called a well dressed woman.

It pleases her to be told that she is dangerously fascinating.

It pleases her to be told that she improves a man by her companionship.

It pleases her to be loved and admired by a man who is strong enough to rule and subdue her and make his way her way. To lead her and take care of her.—Philadelphia Music and Drama.

A Story of an English Guard.

A story, illustrating the tenacity of custom in European communities, is that of the sentinel at a certain point in a public garden in London. Nobody knew why he was stationed at that particular point until some one, delving in old records, discovered that generations before a sentinel had been placed there to warn people of a newly painted bench.—Chicago Herald.

His Scythe Buried with Him.

The aged keeper of the Curfew tower, Windsor castle, years ago expressed a desire that the scythe with which he was wont to mow the lawn might be buried with him. Accordingly, after his coffin had been lowered into the grave, the scythe was carefully laid on it.—London Tit-Bits.

Chinese Paper Money.

The Chinese paper currency is in red, white and yellow, with gilt lettering and gorgeous little hand drawn devices. The bills to the ordinary financier might pass for washing bills, but they are worth good money in the flowery kingdom.—Golden Days.

Nearly Ready.

Little Boy—Papa, I wish you'd send me to college.

Papa—It will take a long time to prepare you for college, my son.

Little Boy—Sh-h! You just come down to the river and see me pull an oar.—Good News.

The Expansion Power.

It has been computed that a half note sheet will develop sufficient power, when burned in connection with the triple expansion engine, to carry a ton a mile in an Atlantic steamer.—Philadelphia Ledger.

Whether Women Should Propose.

I must confess it is no little question whether both men and women should have the right of the initiative in love—at least, whether it should be so habitually or by common custom, without any restraint of sentiment. Perhaps something might be lost by such a common participation—something delicate, tender, poetical, valuable. It may be that an inexpressible, indefinable, but very valuable, sentiment may depend on some patience, anxiety, canonical delicacy, conventional reserve on the one side, to meet action, judgment, choice, decision, initiation on the other.

It may be that an equal, unrestrained, similar and open access to each other for initiative or confession of love might wear away much bloom, wonder, sanctity, which is preserved by the difference of relation of the two to the beginning and avowal.

A seeker and a sought, a proposer and a considerer, a leader and a follower, a petitioner and a giver may be a fairer sight and more wholesome to love than two who may challenge each other equally, who therefore have no defined duties or sweet reciprocities regarding each other, who perhaps may delay for each other—the stupid situation—or may strive to get the start of each other—an utterly demeaning and undoing rivalry—or may scramble to forestall others—a profane haste which often is bad enough now.—St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

Man's Inhumanity to Woman.

There is a young married woman in this city who declares that men are heartless brutes in general, and that her own husband is the most heartless of his race.

She and her husband went down to the seashore one Thursday morning with their only child, a sturdy little boy of three years, and a nurse, and after seeing the others comfortably fixed the husband returned to the city.

On Friday afternoon, as he was seated in his office chatting with a medical friend, he received a telegram reading:

"Dear Harry—Little Jack has swallowed a silver five cent piece. I am almost distracted. Telegraph me what you think had better be done."

The dispatch was handed to the doctor, who said: "As there's no danger at all, it will be all right if the youngster's given a dose of oil."

With a sigh of relief the relieved father thereupon wired:

"Dear Edith—Don't worry. I have sent another five cent piece by this evening's post."

Later on he telegraphed about the oil, but the awful mockery of his first dispatch was too much for the young mother, and she declares she will not forget it for a long while, "if ever." —Portland (Me.) Express.

Where Leeches Come From.

The large leeches, such as those of Japan, which reach two feet in length, are not in common use, nor are certain poisonous sorts, such as the small black leeches of Australia. The thick, fat, fierce worms of Hungary, Sicily and France are preferred by practitioners who use leeches, and it is from those countries that the rest of the world is supplied. The San Francisco leech farm is formed by placing quantities of the ooze of the Bordeaux swamps, especially imported for the purpose in large boxes with tight covers.

The leeches bore about through the muck until wanted for sale, when they are counted out, washed off and disposed of, ready to bite any living thing, and hang on until they are swollen to eight or ten times their ordinary size. Then they drop off and lie dormant until assimilation shall have been finished and hunger again arouses them.—San Francisco Examiner.

Animals Have "Nerves."

A correspondent writing of the menagerie connected with the Paris National History museum, says the lionesses, tigresses and female leopards are subject to "nerves," and frequently have to be treated with large doses of bromkalium to calm them. The elephant suffers from toothache, and one of its teeth had to be stuffed. The sagacious creature endured the operation of filing and boring with great patience, only rapidly waving its trunk when the pain was violent. When all was over it showed its gratitude by caressing M. Sauverre with the fingerlike extremity of its proboscis.—Vossische Zeitung.

A Lawyer's Advice.

Robert Toombs, although he may have been a rash talker, was a safe counselor and evinced the nicest scruples in the practice of his profession. On one occasion he said to a client, who had stated his case to him: "Yes, you can recover in this suit, but you ought not to do so. This is a case in which law and justice are on opposite sides." The client told him he would push the case anyhow. "Then," replied Mr. Toombs, "you must hire some one else to assist you in your rascality."—San Francisco Argonaut.

How a Horse Goes.

A horse will travel 400 yards in 4½ minutes at a walk, 400 yards in 2 minutes at a trot, 400 yards in 1 minute at a gallop.—Humane World.

THE CIRCUS IN ITS INFANCY.

Reminiscences of the Circus Ring by a Septuagenarian Clown.

"I was for seven years the head clown in Dan Rice's circus, and although I am seventy-nine years old I can sit down and lay both of my heels on the back of my neck."

Then the speaker, Abram Teitsworth, proceeded to make his boast good. He grasped his cowhide boot in one hand and slowly drew his foot up and over his head until the foot actually rested on the back of his neck.

An officer, noticing the condition and the venerable appearance of the tall old man, whose hair is white as snow and whose long white beard makes him look like a patriarch, concluded to take him down to the police station for safe keeping during the night. Here a reporter found the queer old character.

"I guess I've seen 'bout as much of the world as the average man ever sees in these days," said the old gentleman reflectively after he had showed the reporter his acrobatic abilities. "I was stolen from my home by Dan Rice's circus men and staid with him seven years, and many a time have I run down the springboard, taken a leap into the air and turned three or four somersaults over a dozen horses placed side by side.

"Yes, I was stolen from my home," continued the battered lodger. "One day I was playing by the roadside at my father's house in Marstown, N. J. Looking down the road I saw, to my surprise, a tremendous string of wagons and horses and animals. I was wrestling with some of my playmates, and being remarkably strong I could toss them about like puppets. Well, the circus fellows noticed it, and one of them got down off the wagon, grabbed me and took me right along with them. During that summer I acted as choreboy to Dan Rice. I got acquainted with all his horses and in the coming winter they put me into training for the ring.

"I tell you, I could keep their clowns level when I went into the ring the following summer. Many times in my boyhood days I used to back our old mare up against a stone wall and practice jumping on and off her back. We clowns used to hunt for dear life for all the odd stories and jokes going, so we could 'guy' the boys and girls who always attended the circus. It almost broke me up trying to keep my stock of jokes and stories ready to use on the spur of the moment, 'twas so hard to recollect them all.

"For three years I rode in the ring Dan Rice's famous horse, 'Philadelphia Flag.' It was the prettiest horse I ever saw, and so strong and ugly no one could handle him but myself. But I've ridden that horse in the ring and run him and licked him so hard he'd actually squeal. I rode that horse three successive years. I enjoyed circus life immensely. When I was not performing I used to get out a fine horse and go tearing around town to create some excitement. I guess 'tis a good deal the same streak to raise a muss that the cowboy gets into. I used to ride along at breakneck speed, standing on my head on the horse, then standing up on his bare back or letting him go slower and turn somersaults right up in the air, and come down and light on his back amid the yells of the delighted villagers.

"Dan Rice was one of the most liberal men that ever was. Whenever I wanted money I could go to Dan and say, 'I want thirty or forty dollars,' and with a voice like a trumpet old Dan would say, 'You can have it, sir-r-r.' You could hear him all over the circus tent. I earned $100 a month, and at the end of the month just as sure as I lived I'd be in debt.

"We didn't have railroads and palace cars in those days. We just had to travel by night over muddy roads from town to town. Travel all night in the mud and rain, exhibit in the afternoon and evening."—Chicago News.

The Ruling Passion.

Two old fellows, after a long separation, were talking over their earlier years.

"And whatever became of Major Courtley; 'Beau Courtley' as we called him?" asked one.

"Died a dozen years ago," was the sad response.

"What a dandefied chap he was; loved fine clothes better than anything in the world."

"Yes; and yet he died without a shirt to his back."

"Indeed, is that so? Had he lost everything?"

"Oh, no; he wore pajamas."—Detroit Free Press.

Japan Clover.

The Japan clover is spreading all over the southern states. It was introduced there, nobody knows how, during the latter years of the war, and has since then become so common that its appearance in any locality attracts no attention. Nobody knows how it spreads. It appears mysteriously in a place where it was never seen before, and where it is difficult to explain how the seeds could have come. It grows luxuriantly and answers all the purposes of common clover, crowding out the different grasses and almost all kinds of weeds.—St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

Cruel, Cruel.

To its victims is the inexorable foe to human peace, that destroyer of rest a frequent termination of human life—the malaria. Like many another physical ills, it is easily remediable at the outset with Hostetter's Stomach Bitters, which expels the rheumatic virus from the blood through the kidneys. There exists the amplest evidence to prove that in cases that have resisted other treatment the Bitters has produced thorough and permanent results. But to temporize with this malady is folly. Attack it at once with the Bitters and it may be nipped in the bud. When mature it is the most obstinate of complaints. Kidney trouble, dyspepsia, neuralgia, incipient gout, constipation, malaria, and liver complaint beat a hasty retreat when the Bitters is summoned to the rescue. A wineglassful three times a day.
