Pennsylvania Militia in Camp.

Gettysburg, Pa., July 21.—The division encampment of the national guard of Pennsylvania officially opened this morning although the advance guard came here several days ago to erect tents and prepare everything for the sheltering and maintenance of the troops and for the organization of the various duties connected with the provost, commissary and other departments. Part of the troops arrived yesterday evening and nearly all the rest this morning. By afternoon all the troops included in the division encampment will be here and the camp will be in full running order. The encampment is under the command of General John W. Schall. The troops will remain in camp until July 29, when they will return to their respective homes, except those troops which will be selected to take part in the regular army encampment at Mount Gretna, where will be assembled the troops from a half a dozen different states.

A gold medal will be awarded at the division encampment here to the oldest member of the Pennsylvania national guard in continuous service. This medal may be awarded to enlisted men, commissioned or non-commissioned officers. The claim of each candidate must be supported by the records in the adjutant general's office.

Sea Girt, N. J., July 21.—The Fifth regiment of the New Jersey Militia went into camp here today for one week.

Lewiston, Del., July 21.—The First Delaware Infantry, national guard of Delaware, went into camp on the Morrow farm, a short distance from here, today. The site is considered far superior to that selected for any previous encampment and offers special advantages for field work and target practice.

FASHIONS FOR CHILDREN

There seems to be as great a variety in the styles and materials for the children as there are for their elders, of which linens lead the materials and the Empire modes the styles. In spite of the mother's needle and the visiting dressmaker there are establishments and women in this city that do nothing else but cater to the wants of the little ones.

As with her elder sister the short Eton or Empire bolero suit used with a circular or princess skirt appears as the most popular for the young miss while for traveling the pony jacket will be extensively worn.

For the traveling dress gray mixture is the most serviceable color, and the checks and over plaids are also used and have a good deal of trimming in the way of braid—especially soutache—buttons, collar and cuffs, silk bands and fancy buttons. Most of the trimmings are of the same shade as the dress material or a contrasting shade of the same color. For day and evening wear all the dainty colors, such as the popular pink, blue, green and yellow, the delicate pastel shades, and above all, white, are in great favor.

Very stylish would be an Eton costume, and suitable for traveling, made from a fine over-checked medium gray mohair, a material and color that will stand much wear and tear. The skirt is cut by a three-piece pattern and is stitched in box-plait effect on each side of the front gore and tucked to the yoke depth and the hem is finished by several rows of stitching. The slightly full front of the jacket tucked on the shoulders to yoke depth and gathered in at the waistband. Around the neck, down the fronts and over the waistband is a prettily shaped facing decorated with stitching and buttons and a narrow braid heading. The jacket is tucked on each side near the arm size. The sleeves are elbow length and are finished by pointed, turned-back cuffs. Worn with this is a white linen waist beautifully embroidered, gray silk gloves and a gray chip hat decorated with a fold of white silk and two long quills. The shoes were of fine leather having gray uppers.

A dainty frock made from embroidered batiste would be pretty for evening wear fashioned from a waist of very graceful cut tucked to stimulate three box-plaits down the front finished at the low, round, Dutch neck with a band of insertion. A bertha starts from each side of the center back, runs over the shoulders and down each side of the box-plaits to the waist line. The three-piece skirt is trimmed with a band of insertion, and this has finished the sleeve ruffles and the bertha, while the belt is made from a band of insertion. The sleeves are two deep ruffles adjusted to sleeve caps as a foundation. The belt may be of a dainty piece of Dresden ribbon with long ends in the back.

Blue mercerized gingham was used for a natty gown for morning wear. The waist closes at the left side of the front and has its fullness in four rather deep tucks stitched down from the shoulder seams to the belt. The neck is cut out in a V and completed with a deep rolling collar edged with a row of white insertion inside of which was a white shield piece and collar. A bow of plaid ribbon finishes the closing of the rolling collar and a jaunty belt of the ribbon is worn. The sleeves are full to just below the elbow, from which point they are tucked and gathered into white cuffs. The seven-gored skirt has the center gores both front and back laid in plaits and stitched in tuck effect to just above hemline depth.

White linen and embroidery was combined in an attractive costume for a miss of fifteen. The waist was tucked and stitched to form two single box-plaits on each side of the front closing. The sleeves were tucked above the narrow little cuffs, above which they were very full. The skirt is a seven-gore model tucked to form inverted seams and box-plaits and the hem is decorated with several rows of stitching. With this costume a fancy leather belt is worn, a turned-over embroidered collar and plaid tie, silk gloves and a white straw sailor trimmed with a band of black velvet and a chiffon bow on the right side in which was stuck a white and gray quill, while beneath the brim and covering the deep bandeau was a quilling of box-plaited muslin. This model would be pretty made up in blue cashmere, with fancy silk bands for decoration and having a blue hat to match the costume.

In looking over the exhibits of two of our largest stores that cater extensively to the needs of the children I noticed that plaids and checks were more in evidence than the plainer colors. An attractive suit for a little girl, made in sailor fashion from white linen was finished with a sailor collar and cuffs of dark blue linen. The blouse was cut from a regular sailor model with a yoke facing in the front and is faced up the front to where the points of the sailor collar met in a chic little bow. The shield piece is of white linen. The waist blouses prettily under box-plaited skirt cut with five gores and attached to a body or underwaist, the sleeves are full and gathered by tucks into narrow little cuffs at the wrists.

A pretty little frock of nainsook, trimmed with embroidery for a little maid of 6 has a round yoke of the Salisbury cut with a Dutch neck; the blouse fullness is laid in tucks beneath this and stitched down a short distance and is trimmed with two rather deep tucks running across the front and back. The elbow sleeves are in short puff effect, and are finished by a row of fancy lace heading and bow. The straight full skirt is sewed onto the waist and is trimmed with two deep tucks and a sash is worn around the waist.

For morning nothing is so serviceable as brown Holland slips; in these they may play in the sand heaps and make mud pies to their hearts' content while they breathe in the fresh air and grow strong and hearty.

Suitable as a model for these slips is one developed from brown Holland, which is cut with a narrow pointed yoke of embroidery, back and front, on each side of which the fullness of the body is disposed of by means of tucks from the shoulder to yoke depth while the fullness of the center front is gathered to the yoke. The sleeves are made in bishop style and the deep hem at the bottom of the skirt is trimmed with stitching.

Russian suits also make good play dresses. A jaunty little suit of this order was made from blue chambray with collar, closing band on the left side, belt and wrist bands of white linen. Buttons are the only additional decoration.

For traveling a long coat made after the style of her older sister's raincoat would be useful; and a pretty style for a short coat of dressier wear could be constructed from heavy white linen, in pony style, having a deep square collar of all-over linen embroidery edged with narrow embroidery, cuffs of the same, full sleeves and fancy buttons as a decoration.

The lingerie hat is liked above all others for the little tots and two or three will be none too many for them, and for the vacation have a few little sunbonnets for wear while at their play.

A pretty little bathing suit could be made from blue sateen made with a full skirt gathered in a band to the loose waist, having a deep square collar and short sleeves. For very little girls the bathing suit is often made as little knickerbockers joined to a blouse waist, while the bathing suits of the boys are usually made in Pajamas style.

But the little men of the family have been by no means forgotten. Pretty little suits in blouse styles are shown in white, blue, tan linen serge or flannel. Of course, every one of these little gentlemen wants to copy as far as possible father, brother or uncle and in this respect he will be able to satisfy himself in his best clothes. But the boy also wants to play and while at play he does not want to be bothered with much style of even clothes themselves, so give at those times the kind he can tumble about in without any fear of a tear or a stain.

For his morning suit our lad should have knickerbockers of cheviot or serge for wear with wash blouses. One model shows a striped gingham having box-plaits down each side of the front. The collar is a detachable one and may be replaced with one of white linen and a bright tie. Another blouse fastened on the right side and on the left was decorated with a deep pocket quite usable by the use of pockets. This blouse was further ornamented by white strap trimmings and a standing collar and narrow bands at the wrists. A blouse that is cool and pleasantly loose for play is made from dark blue chambray in sailor style and the boy may wear a white shield or not, according to the warmth of the weather.
