Political Picture Sunday and Monday

"The Dark Horse," Venetian feature for Sunday and Monday, adapted by two former political correspondents from a story by an anonymous author, said to be a prominent political figure, concerns the difficulties encountered when a political party cannot reach an agreement on its candidate for governor and compromises on a "dark horse," who turns out to be difficult to handle because of a tendency to do the wrong thing at the right moment—for the opposing party. Warren William is called in to manage the candidate's campaign and steer him in the proper channels. The situation is productive of a brand of comedy rare on stage or screen.

Manager Phelps reports that local women are showing considerable interest in the Wednesday night shows, which are featured by giving away of beauty creams to adult women.
