The state liquor control commission has reversed its recent order banning signs on beer parlors. The new ruling permits one sign on the side of the building or the window of drink emporiums, but bans the use of the words "ale," "beer" or "wine." Signs must not be more than 30 inches high nor cover an area larger than 200 square inches.

Grocers Hit Profiteering

New significance has been lent to the "We Do Our Part" slogan of NRA by the Food and Grocery Distributors' code in participation with the President's campaign against unwarranted price-raising and profiteering in foods under pretext of drought shortage, according to Verne Curry, chairman of the Washington County Food and Grocery Distributors' Code Authority.

"Under the leadership of C. H. Jannsen, chairman of the National Food and Grocery Distributors' Code Authority, of Washington, the Washington County Food Code Authority has flung its forces into the battle on behalf of the consumer against speculative food prices," Curry asserted.

"Although it is true that some shortage may exist in certain items of diet, there is no question but that there are ample supplies to feed the nation until another crop is harvested. In many instances, supplies are greater than those of a year ago. There has been, necessarily, a more than seasonally heavy buying movement on the part of foresighted wholesalers and retailers. The existence of fairly heavy stocks in the hands of wholesalers and retailers will tend to equalize the price level and avert an unreasonably high peak later in the year."

An emergency meeting of the National Food Code Authority was called into session by Janssen in Chicago recently, when fear of speculation became widespread, and Janssen was authorized to proffer the mechanism of the National Code Authority to assist the government in its efforts toward consumer protection. The national code is the machinery of industrial self-government by 3,500 food wholesalers and jobbers and 350,000 retailers, through the agency of 950 local code authorities and 49 state authorities. The president welcomed the offer of co-operation with all federal agencies.

"The food trade must retain public confidence, and to do so it must protect its members against unfair and unjust charges. The trade itself is determined that any attempts at profiteering shall be sharply curbed, from motives of self-interests as well as of simple patriotism," Mr. Curry stated.

Consumers should keep in mind these important facts about supplies of fruits and vegetables, based on estimates of the bureau of agricultural economics of the United States Department of Agriculture, Mr. Curry said, quoting from a statement by Frederick C. Howe, Consumers Counsel of the Agricultural Adjustment Administration:

"1. There are ample supplies of fresh fruits and vegetables, so there is no necessity to shift purchases from the fresh to the canned variety. Supplies of fresh vegetables coming to market now and up to December are from the 'late states,' practically untouched by drought. They are seven per cent under the five-year average, but five per cent greater than last year. These crops will be followed during the winter and spring months by supplies from southern states. Potato and sweet potato supplies are as large as in 1933.

"2. Vegetables for canning purposes are grown in some states which have been affected by the drought, but because more acres were planted in many instances, drought has reduced production only moderately under the average five-year output.

"3. Canned vegetable supplies in 1934-1935 are expected to be nine per cent greater than last year, and 13 per cent under the five-year average. Three of these five years were years of high consumption, when consumers could afford to buy more liberally. Supplies this year will be ample. There is even probability that plenty will be left over at the end of the winter unless consumers' purchasing power increases greatly or distributors mark down prices which they have shown no willingness to do yet.

"Canned tomato supplies give promise not only of being larger than last year, but 14 per cent above the five year average.

"Canned sweet corn, green peas, and snap beans are expected to be at least as plentiful as last year, though supplies may go from 11 to 24 per cent smaller than supplies in years when consumers had greater purchasing power.

"4. Canned fruits, as a whole, will probably be two per cent greater in supply than last year, and only two per cent less than the average for five years.

"Canned pineapple and pears promise to be more plentiful than the average of the past five years.

"Canned peaches will probably be as generous in supply as last year, and not much smaller than in previous years."

ON OREGON FARMS

ALBANY—One of the most successful general-purpose irrigation projects in Linn county is that on the A. Fromhers farm at Lebanon, says F. C. Mullen, county agent. Mr. Fromhers has 9 acres of Ladino clover, 5 acres of loganberries, 3 acres of potatoes, 3 acres of peaches, 6 acres of alfalfa and 2 acres of miscellaneous truck crops under irrigation. He feels that the benefits he is deriving from irrigation this year will practically pay for his entire installation.
